No Trebel In Paradise

The Treble Chorus of New England

BY STEVEN D. BROWN

The Treble Chorus of New England is one of the real gems among the area's performing groups. Founded in 1975 by Marie Stultz, it is comprised of school-aged children who sing with an estimable degree of commitment and polish. At the time of the group's formation, Stultz's husband Richard was director of the North Reading Choral Society; he asked her to prepare a children's chorus for a performance of Vaughan Williams's "Hodie."

"I put a notice in the paper and 72 kids showed up. After the performance, about 36 of them wanted to continue singing together. And that's how the Treble Chorus got started," Stultz explains.

What started as a makeshift group has grown into an ensemble that has received international recognition. The Treble Chorus has performed professionally with Michael Tilson Thomas and the Pittsburgh Symphony, as well as the Boston Lyric Opera. This past summer, they participated in the Shrewsbury Festival in England, a country where the treble chorus is a tradition as entrenched as the monarchy. Beyond this, several alumni of the Treble Chorus of New England are currently pursuing musical studies at conservatories and universities.

If you'd like to see this group, and don't have the time to travel to Great Britain, fear not. Locally, the Treble Chorus of New England will present two fully staged performances of Henry Purcell's allegorical three-act opera Dido and Aeneas on Saturday, May 8, at 8 p.m. at the Trinitarian Church on Elm Street in North Andover and on Sunday, May 9, at 4 p.m. at the Methuen Memorial Music Hall.

The Treble Chorus of New England at the Methuen Memorial Hall.

Generally regarded as one of Purcell's greatest works and his only opera that is entirely sung, Dido and Aeneas was first performed by "the young gentlewomen" of Josias Priest's boarding school in 1689. Although rarely performed in such a manner today, Dido and Aeneas is an ideal vehicle for the artistry of these gifted and ambitious young singers. Marie Stultz's energies seem to know no bounds; in addition to directing Dido and Aeneas, she designed and made the baroque costumes that the cast will wear.

Stultz is a strong advocate of introducing opera to young people, both as performers and audience. "It offers more in terms of vocal development and is more challenging than musical comedy," she explains. As for Dido and Aeneas, Stultz maintains that the character of the lovelorn Dido is far more convincing when sung by a young girl rather than a middle-aged singer. "Even Mozart," she says, "would have chosen younger singers for an opera like The Magic Flute."

Stultz believes that performing opera and choral music is an ideal way for kids to learn how to work as a team without being in competition. "They all root for one another in terms of solos," she says. "When we have solo roles, we hold auditions. I train the Treble Chorus specifically to sing independently. Some choral directors go after a homogenized sound...I work off of the individual strength of each voice. My job is to get them to sing as well as they can, not to produce a homogenized sound to make Marie Stultz look good," she finishes with emphasis.

Marie Stultz hopes to bring the Treble Chorus of New England to Boston more frequently and plans are already set for fall performance of Otto Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in John Hancock Hall. "The idea is to introduce kids to opera and to Shakespeare and to have kids do opera for kids," she says.

But to currently hear Dido and Aeneas, you will have to head either to North Andover or Metheun. Judging from the musical level of a concert the Treble Chorus gave this past winter at Boston's Church of the Advent, it should be well worth the trip.

Tickets for each performance are $8 and are available at the door. For further information about the Treble Chorus of New England, call (508) 664-4705. ❑

South by Southwest Music Conference

BY SANDER WOLF

A seemingly short bit ago, while most of Boston was thigh-deep in snow, several local bands took the opportunity to escape to the sunnier plains of Austin, Texas, for the annual South By Southwest (SXSW) Music and Media Conference. The conference is a multi-faceted event that transforms the city of Austin into what Paul Kochanski of the Boston country band the Swinging Steaks calls a "Disneyland for musicians."

For at least five days a year, 400 bands are selected from 3500 applicants to play in synchronized showcases that take place in every club across the city. The shows are attended by music industry representatives and all sorts of other music lovers. For $30, a person can purchase a wristband that allows unlimited club-hopping for the duration of SXSW, and since most of Austin's clubs line a single street, seeing six bands a night is not an uncommon thing.

At the Austin Convention Center, panels were held and live performances were featured, including a discussion on groupies, featuring Pamela Des Barres (author of the ultimate groupie Bible, I'm With The Band), the traditional A&R panel featuring Tom Zutaut (responsible for getting Guns 'N' Roses a record deal), and a panel of artists that featured bizarre word-play between diverse characters.

Boston was lucky enough to be represented at SXSW by at least a dozen acts playing in showcases, including Melissa Ferrick, the Tribulations, Orangutang, the Swinging Steaks, Miles Deathmuffin, Modern Farmer and Naked Age. Alternative pop band Letters To Cleo moved up its spring tour to make the trip to Austin, but because of complications, weren't able to play. Even without a gig though, the band still got something out of SXSW.

Guitarist Greg McKenna notes, "Well, for one thing, it wasn't snowing down there. And because our show was messed up, people from Famous Music [our publishing company] and Budweiser [one of the band's sponsors] made up for it by wearing our band t-shirts and really pushing Letters To Cleo to lots of people who could really help us out." And it didn't end there. "We got free meals out of it too," he adds.

The hard rocking Naked Age, like the masochists they are, embarked on a 30-hour drive, with only minimal breaks, to make it to Austin in time for their show, and maintain that the journey was well worth it. "We discovered rural America on the way and we came up with a term for it – 'TurboAmericana.' As a band we've always lived in big cities, but on this trip we got a chance to meet real American people," explains lead singer Dax Callner.

So why doesn't Boston host an event like SXSW? Why shouldn't Boston be added to the list of cities that hold events like Austin, New York, Philadelphia, and San Francisco? As Kochanski concurs, "Boston already has the talent. It would take a little cooperation between clubs, bands, and the media, but eventually if we work on it we could create something just as cool as Austin's SXSW – the whole idea is really inspiring." ❑

WARREN ZEVON
LEARNING TO FLINCH
GIANT RECORDS

Uncanny songs and dry humor have always been a part of the semi-underground legend that Warren Zevon has become, and on Learning to Flinch, the story is basically the same. The album, which was recorded live during a world-wide solo tour, features Zevon switching between piano, acoustic guitar, keyboards, and extra-slippery slide guitar. Only problem is that, although he accompanies himself well, the persona on Learning to Flinch is Warren Zevon the Songwriter, not Warren Zevon the Musician.

Subjected to the album's sparse, concentrated setting, some of the tunes fare far better than others. "Excitable Boy," (which is later reprised on acoustic guitar during "Poor Poor Pitiful Me") still retains its sense of humor and simple wickedness when performed live, while "Lawyers, Guns, and Money" loses its charm, as its words are monotonously chanted over repeating acoustic chords. "Werewolves of London," an obvious crowd favorite even in its lacking, unplugged format, ranks somewhere in-between the two.

What's worth remembering from Learning to Flinch are the ballads that steal the show. Zevon pours whatever amount of heart that he has left into "Splendid Isolation," "Searching for a Heart," and a few others, with satisfying results. Although there are plenty of other great moments on the album, nothing else quite matches up to this outpouring of emotion and energy.

CHRIS ISAAK
SAN FRANCISCO DAYS
REPRISE RECORDS

Chris Isaak might just be the perfect poster boy for apple-pie Americana: under an Elvisian helmet of slicked back hair, he's good-old-boy handsome and has more 'aw, shucks' per pound than any other performer around.

He's the type of guy your mother would have a crush on. But what truly makes Isaak bankable is that it's the daughters that really love him. Somehow, he manages to be marketable to more genres than would seem possible. Top 40 loves him for his dreamy balladry and hunky good looks, he's a C&W staple; he even gets played on alternative radio stations.

But whether that's a boon or a pitfall is questionable. He could wind up getting spread a little thin, and no alternative fan worth his/her nosering would be caught dead with a CD that's a big hit with the C&W crowd. If you're familiar with Isaak's previous works, then you generally know what this latest platter sounds like. He sticks to his formula of Roy Orbison-esque crooning with plenty of C&W and southern boogie thrown in.

The standout track (and first single) is "Can't Do a Thing (To Stop Me)," highlighting a poignant falsetto and a sorrowful disposition. He's definitely a soulful fella, but he's self-deprecating enough to delve into a bit of self-parody, and subtly hams it up with smatterings of cheesy Hammond organ. He may have the looks of a heartbreaker, but he's too sweet and goofy to ever hurt your feelings.

A good rave tune's gotta have at least one of two things: One, a beat more kickin' than Pelé, and/or two, a clever, catchy title (example: Obscure FM's "Michael Jackson is in Heaven Now"). The album's first two tracks fulfill the latter requirement ("James Brown is Dead" and "Balloony"), and most of the CD manages the former. While not as catchy or interesting as Utah Saints, they do turn out some thoroughly danceable numbers, like "James Brown is Dead" and "I'm Raving."

But L.A. Styles falls into the same trap that the Shamen often do: they stick rap sections into the middle of songs, and while it's understand that they're trying to make themselves more salable, it just gets in the way. It gets less interesting when the techno-noise abates to make room for someone talking. Face it, techno-heads don't want your words, they want your jams. If James Brown fans take exception to the signature track, then don't open the sleeve; there's a cartoon of a dog whizzing on the King of Soul's grave captioned "James Brown Is Wet!!"

Aside from providing a good laugh, it serves to demonstrate techno's overriding theme of rejecting nostalgia. Anything older than yesterday's paper gets tossed. Not a very accommodating stance, granted, but at least our generation's finally got something we can call our own. But watch out. If you don't like it, you get whizzed on.

STRAUSS ALSO SPRACH ZARATHUSTRA; EIN HELDENLEBEN
FRITZ REINER, CONDUCTOR

We are fortunate that Fritz Reiner's life extended into the stereo era, and that he recorded with an instrument as responsive as the Chicago Symphony. The Strauss tone poems coupled on this generously-filled release are works for which Reiner and Chicago had a strong affinity, and which they played with unquestionable authority. Recorded in 1954, these are among the earliest stereo recordings made by anyone. Though the sound may not be as crisply defined as today's digital recordings, it holds up quite well and RCA's CD transfers reveal a far fuller spectrum than was possible on vinyl. Issued on RCA's Living Stereo series, the low price of this Strauss program adds further appeal.

BROOKLYN PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
PHILIP GLASS: "LOW" SYMPHONY
DENNIS RUSSELL DAVIES, CONDUCTOR POINT MUSIC

As synthesizers became prominent in popular music during the 70s, composers and producers found a new vehicle which enabled them to create sounds approximating orchestral instruments. David Bowie and Brian Eno were among those who began exploring such possibilities. On "Low," their collaborative album, now available on Ryko, they went beyond the usual perimeter of rock, using the technology to create broad, almost static soundscapes. Philip Glass has taken three selections from "Low" and scored them for full orchestra, developing their themes through the shifting rhythmic motor for which he is noted. The barriers between classical and popular music continue to grow less distinct. Composers like Brian Eno and Philip Glass are among those who have been instrumental in that process for over 20 years.

ENUFF Z' NUFF
ANIMALS WITH HUMAN INTELLIGENCE

Whereas most glam-rock acts ape Aerosmith for image (everyone seems to dress like Guns -n- Roses circa "Appetite"), Enuff Z' Nuff seems to take their cues from the Beatles, right down to the little round glasses permanently perched halfway down the nose of band namesake Chip Znuff. But all the nasal harmonizing in the world can't disguise the fact that this is very standard fare. Granted, its got the potential for mass appeal; their first album (this is their third) spawned a couple of minor MTV hits, and their latest sounds much the same. Indeed, "Master of Pain" or "Rock n World" would fit in very nicely at MTV. But that's not exactly high praise, is it?

Lyrically, they only escape rock & roll clichés once, on "Mary Anne Lost Her Baby," about a woman who gets an abortion but then regrets it when she's older and lonely. They get high marks for having the guts to tread on such thin ideological ice, but the sentiment seems misplaced among an entire album of glam-rock posing. Somehow, it doesn't seem like this particular bunch of male rock stars qualifies as authorities on the subject.

Enuff z' nuff? Agreed.

ROBERT HUGHES

THE CANDY SKINS

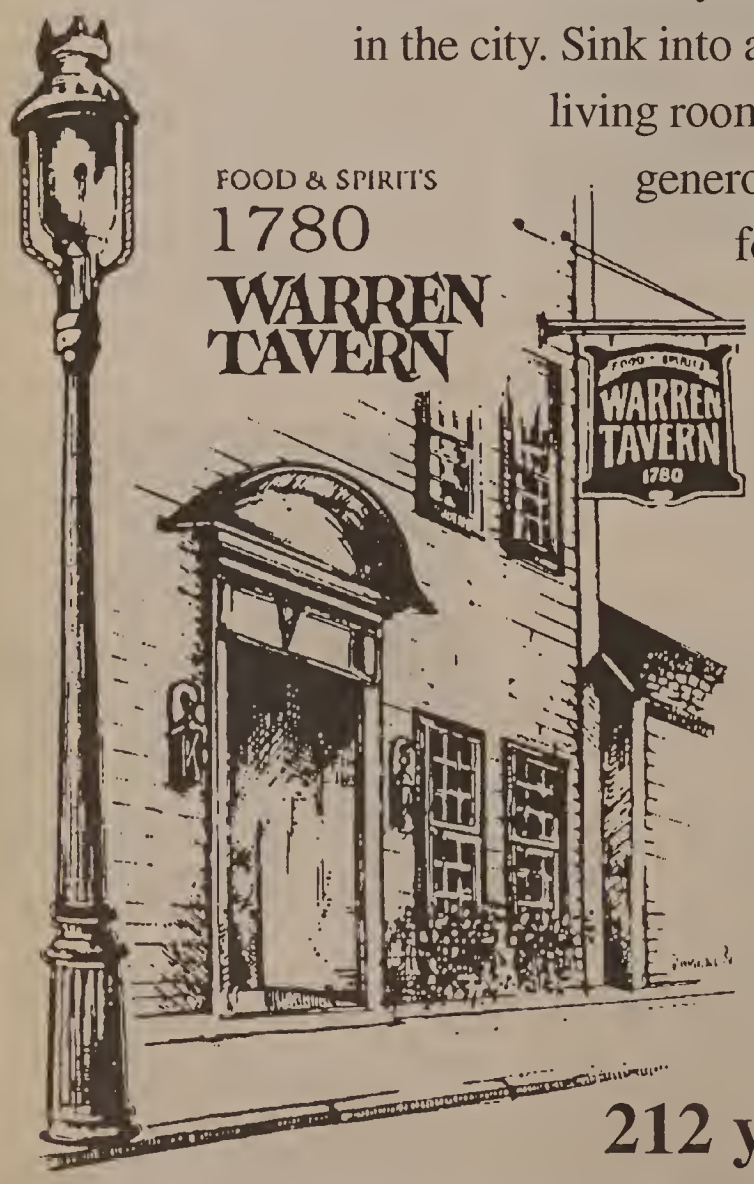
The Candy Skins second release is an enjoyable, catchy collection of a dozen alternative/pop tracks with above-average lyrics and some meaty guitar lines. The English band avoids the dance music so many of their peers have been submerged in lately, and instead focuses more on mildly distorted guitars and pop harmonies, a la Teenage Fanclub. The opening track and the first single, "Wembley," sounds like your standard college radio hit, but lead vocalist Nick Cope's voice has enough grit to make it interesting.



The album's high points come from its mid-tempo songs, such as "Everybody Loves You," a song about deranged fan worship, and "Grass," which is what Simon and Garfunkle would have done if they were from Oxford, England rather than New York City, and were obsessed with gardening.

About Last Night...

It's A Small Planet After All

BY LAUREN DARE AKA THE LAST CALL LADY

I remember going to Disney World when I was a kid, and going on the "It's a Small World After All" ride. At the time, I thought they meant it was a small world because all those frighteningly animated figures were so, well, short. But now, having become sophisticatedly aware of things like metaphors, I realize that the point the folks at Disney were trying to get across was that we are all part of one world community and that we're all much more closely related to each other than we might have thought.

This touchingly sappy sentiment was more like wishful thinking when I was a kid, but now, in the 90s, the world is coming much closer to realizing this "global village" vision, and everyone from AT&T to Nike is cashing in on it. You can now reach out and touch someone anywhere in the world, the rainforest is becoming the ultimate workout destination, Michael Jackson parades around at half-time shows with bewildered children abducted from their home countries in a garish display of international unity, and even Boston, stronghold of a determinedly homogeneous Yankee tradition, is becoming a polyglot melting pot.

Well, I ask, what better place to expand your horizons and jump into the global swing of things than at a bar? After all, inebriation is a world-wide phenomenon, and after a few drinks, the differences between people can become amazingly blurred. By far, the best place in Boston to espouse this new pan-global, "we are one people," philosophy is the new Small Planet Bar and Grill on Boylston Street, to be found in the space previously occupied by the Back Bay Bistro. Frank Bell, the owner of the old Back Bay Bistro, is successfully riding the crest of this new wave of eco-awareness, having created a combination of cool food and hip, multi-cultural atmosphere.

The decor of the new bar/restaurant is funky, semi-tropical and wildly international (though not in that traditional, we-are-too-cool-for-you Newbury Street international sense), replete with papier-mache wild animals and greenery. Walking in there makes you feel like you've suddenly stumbled into the middle of that Cool Mint Listerine commercial where the bottle swings through the jungle on a vine to an accompanying Tarzan soundtrack. After a few Absolut White Russians (new drink, they're supposed to be good for my ulcer - right!), I felt the urge to strip off my clothes, don animal skins (fake, of course!) and roll around with wild animals and the soon-to-be-extinct Yanomamo tribesmen.

THE SMALL PLANET
565 Boylston Street
Boston
536-4477

The basic idea behind this theme seems to be vaguely eco-aware, culturally plural and ultra-cool. As far as cultural plurality, etc. goes, you're as likely to find it at the Small Planet as anywhere in Boston. Both the staff and the clientele are trendily eclectic; you could have a pony-tailed, Birkenstock-wearing crunchy type on one side of you at the bar, and on the other, a be-blazored, "done it, seen it, had it" Euro type. The Small Planet serves one and all, with its funky world cuisine which features a little something for everyone.

This place is so politically correct, I think the only people who could possibly be offended by it must have spent the last 15 years in a detached-trailer park somewhere. The bar crowd is diverse and pretty heavy on almost every night of the week, and the Small Planet has a very popular lunch as well. Starting in May, you'll also be able to cool your heels and raise your global consciousness over a few cocktails on their outdoor sidewalk cafe. After spending enough time at the Small Planet, you'd have to be brain dead not to realize that it is just a small world after all. ❑

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code.

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•CACTUS CLUB 236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos. Join us in the evening and experience our firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can try a Platinum margarita with Sauza Hornitos, triple sec, fresh lemonade and fresh lime juice. Full menu available at bar.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky, but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies.depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos. Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30a.m.-2:30p.m..

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province St., Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little., in fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30a.m.-12a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

•MONDAY'S PIANO BAR 277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline. . Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30p.m.. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•O'LEARY'S 734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

•PROVINCE STREET PUB 227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week til' 2a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2a.m.. Appetizers served until 1a.m..

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos. An Irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall. Entertainment alternates between traditional Irish music and DJ dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only valid IDs accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals & athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston.The bar now attracts manly athletes. Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — APRIL 28 - MAY 11, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)
While newsworthy Mercury squares rebellious Uranus and the fiery Leo moon joins Chiron, the wounded healer, and the media bombards us with the First Anniversary L.A. Riot retrospective, remember that Beltane, the Wicca festival of renewal, is upon us. In the old days, not unlike last year, the peasants built bonfires of purification before sowing the seeds for the next harvest. This May Day, let's build a May pole to dance around and rejoice that tanks are no longer parading down the main streets, the mean streets of Compton. (We're not sure about Moscow.) The perfectable Virgo moon this weekend supports environmental causes and earthly delights that spring from Taurean sensuality – personal pleasures can be better than ever. This mood extends through Monday when another expensive Venus Jupiter opposition brings in the bills. Mercury enters Taurus on Wednesday, so there'll be one less militaristic Aries influence operating, but we won't notice until the weekend. The Wesak full moon festival celebrating the annual return of the Buddha to Planet Earth and our alignment with the spiritual hierarchy is exact Wednesday at 11:34 p.m. at 15+ Taurus Scorpio. A paternalistic Capricorn moon on Mother's Day insists we honor our forebears or suffer the consquences, (like Nostradamus' earthquake prediction for May?).

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)
Watch for a repeat or revised version of an offer tendered around Palm Sunday/Passover when Venus in your sign last opposed generous Jupiter. Perhaps there'll be more money, less love; maybe the other way around; nonetheless you'll feel the exchange has gone about as far as it can. Whether you accept or reject won't be decided now, even if you feel sufficiently provoked when Mercury squares your Mars ruler on Wednesday and the potent full moon energy illuminates (but will it resolve?) a pressing financial matter.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)
As magnanimous Jupiter opposes your Venus ruler, too much may not be nearly enough. Better to buy luxury items you can return when your mood changes than to push loved ones into making a stronger commitment than they're ready for. Not everyone can take a risk, bet the farm on your whim. Try to patch up other differences during this highly negotiable period while you're feeling optimistic about your prospects. Spiritual insights and psychic revelations during the Buddha full moon festival. Happy birthday. Don't let Mom bug you.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)
Your receptors may be jammed while your Mercury ruler gets static from erratic Uranus this weekend. Don't jump to conclusions about a friend, a fool or his money. A parting of the ways (and means) could come on Wednesday when Mercury squares Mars in your money house. Between these two aggravating aspects there's an opportunity to stay stone cold sober and sensible about your next long range move. If you must adorn the house, buy flowers you can afford, not Van Gogh's; the familiar urge to splurge is irresistible.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)
Everything seems to be popping at once. Info about work sets your partner off; reactions are unexpected, even weird. Messages from the media or your own network tick you off on Wednesday when you're overly sensitized anyway. An adventurous woman comes back into your view finder, so there'll be an opportunity to travel, write or teach with her before long. Plus this potent full moon energy puts you in touch with higher spiritual honchos who might drop another clue to what you're doing here.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)
Stability when you least expect it from a problematic partner, respect from a critical elder and may be a ticket out of here. The Taurus new moon focuses on greener pastures, foreign shores the running of the bulls in Pamplona? This calm spell following the recent chaos shifts your attention to long range goals and lifelong dreams, something solid and, if possible, permanent. Until you attain it however, there's this financial matter which seems to be growing before your very eyes.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)
Art, science, politics and war. The main themes of the week parallel your reactions to what occurs when brilliant Uranus and bombastic Mars are squared by your Mercury ruler. Life is lived on at least two planes, one doesn't have to crash if another is having difficulties. There are rays of stability regarding issues of health and service, and those that affect your productivity or your pet's well being bring a sigh of relief. Other sighs, dollar signs, subtlety and sensuality during the full moon.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)
Your partner has a lot to say about your family, none of which you find pleasant. Fight, sulk or take comfort in the finer things of life. As your Venus ruler lines up with expansive Jupiter in your sign, what you want closely resembles what you get. Which guardian angel is looking out for you? Spiritual teachers, masters of the universe are also available for consultation during the Taurus Scorpio full moon, particularly if you're seeking financial guidance. Ask and ye shall receive.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)
A hot, heavy full moon replete with revelations about your personal life. The Buddha festival celebrates the wisdom inherent in the Taurus Scorpio connection, the cycles of life and transformation, reality and resurrection. (I'm writing this as the Branch Davidians burn.) It also brings your significant other into sharp focus and shows what you need from/what you're willing to give to an intimate relationship at this time. Chatter about work, a neighbor or sibling goes on; some of it may upset you.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22- DECEMBER 21)
Fun and games in intricate combinations. As Venus comes on to your Jupiter ruler again, you'll feel like Lady Luck will be with you forever. She won't. Gambling on cards, sports or love can be expensive; so will the stuff you buy for the house. The full moon could turn a casual romantic interest into a clandestine affair, but a secret has to be kept or tempers will fly. Valuable knowledge is obtained along the way, yet the weight of the secret may be too heavy for a truth saying, soothsaying Sag with beans to spill.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)
Verbal barbs and bickering with a parent or landlord makes life on the road sound pretty good; well, bearable. When your mate or business partner joins in the fray next Wednesday, get in touch with a travel agent or anybody who can offer an alternative site for a while. For some not-so-strange reason, money is the solution to your current problems, petty though they may seem. Common sense solutions arise if you can talk Sunday night/Monday morning instead of argue. After the 9th you're in movie/music heaven again.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)
Brilliant, bewildered or simply bothered? The latest info sparks a strong reaction and, if you're not careful, a large outlay of money. Playing markets, marketing plays? You can tip toe through the mind games if you keep your best interests in the forefront. This full moon may strike a resonant chord from the past (who's life is it anyway?) that recalls an abiding emotional attachment. Get out the dream diaries, draw from your unconscious, connect another piece of the puzzle. A healthy change is coming.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)
Great fun if you succumb to a partner's vision of a rosy future. What, besides money, have you got to lose? Advice from a friend can be misleading at first. However, if you seek simple pleasures from the good earth, you'll find plenty of emotional sustenance as well. The full moon can fulfill you on many levels if you accept the sweet mysteries of life, particulary the one that reads, "the more you give, the more you get." Delivery is due on the 11th, when the sun trines (rewards) your Neptune ruler. Hooray!

Marathon Man/Almighty Q,
You did it, aaaaaaaah! You amaze me. Truly. Who else could make women swoon from Wellesley to Boston College, as he flashes that boyishly handsome grin and those cutie tight shorts? I hear the emegency rooms haven't seen that many fainting cases since the Beatles.Congrats, Champ.

ODE TO M.C.
To Martine Marie Monique,
my one and only pomme frite.
It was seven years ago that we met,
and for two years we've been tete-a-tete.
The color of your hair and skin so fair,
Eyes flecked with gold like a tiger.
A wonderful wife, an excellent mother,
With love you're not a miser.
From the shore of Cannes to La Tour Eiffel,
Washington, then San Francisco;
We met, we loved, not thinking of the future
but deep down we had to know.
Champagne, Chocolate, et cetera, a cigarette in bed;
Flowers, dinners, a walk in the woods,
our love was constantly fed.
Austria, Amsterdam, London and La Reunion, the places we've been together.
A whisper, a hug, a kiss, a caress;
your touch as light as a feather.
French food, French wine, French life;
Is American culture the pits?
Hands on the table! No burping allowed!
(What I really need is Berlitz!)
And so it was, two years ago, that we took each other as spouse.
From Paris to Boston you made the move
And succeeded making whole our house.
Je t'aime et je t'embrasse tres fort,
Happy Anniversary #2!!!
From the guy you've made the happiest (me, of course)(And your daughter, Margot, too!)
Your loving husband Phil

Temptress of the Airwaves,
You are my Wonder Woman. Please say you will be mine. I want to touch you where your bathing suit covers. I want to take you down to Waco, TX to meet my cousin, David. Write soon.
Love,
Your Secret Admirer

Dear Mr. Vanderiee,
Oh Art, you handsome bastard! I want to comb your a.m. cowlick, I want to wear your white socks, I want to unlock your drivers'-side door! Get attorney Stanley Williams on the line - pronto! That's right, Jerky. Riddle: what's tall, cute and burrows in the middle of the night? Kisses and hugs,
E.M. Press

Yo, Rottenbutt,
Clear the crust from your eyes and wake up and smell the suit, baby. Break down and hit the basement for some new duds as your faithful followers are sick of the tweed look. While you're at it shave that skull, the sixties were a long time ago, death breath. Sincerely,
The Boys

Dear Abe,
I'd like to grab my ankles for you.
Love,
Mindy

Dear Paul,
I'd very much like to grab my ankles for you.
Love,
Mindy

Dear Brian,
It would be a great pleasure to grab my ankles for you.
Love,
Mindy

Dear Ricardo,
It goes without saying.
Love,
Mindy

Dear Mindy,
I don't know who you are, but, well, what can I say? I like you.
A fond admirer

LIMRAG,
Look, for the last time, you're not Houdini. Stop playing with the fucking handcuffs before I put them on you one night and weld them together. I need them, and I really would not like to have to pry them off of your lifeless, severed limbs, but if I have to, then I guess that I have to. So stop it. They're not toys, well, not your toys at least.
Flash

Erin,
Happy belated Birthday. Do you know that I've never seen you standing up. How tall are you?
Unknown

Toby,Or not Toby. That's a good question. Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer the smog and arteries of Los Angeles, California, or to take alms against a sea of unpaid bills. To fly, to leave. To leave, perchance to eat. Ay, there's the grub.We misseth thou

Look You,
When I'm on the T, I want to ride home, get to my car and do my best to forget that scum like you exists in this universe, never mind so close to my person. So kindly get on the stupid train and, most importantly, LEAVE ME ALONE! After all, a person can only take so much.
A disgruntled passenger

Sue,
Diet Coke in the morning, power lunches, stress all day. If I were you, I would have no hair, high-blood pressure, and be lying flat on the sidewalk 100 ft below still believing I could fly.
Meter feeder

I had a dream last night that I was watching the news and the sports guy came on saying that the Red Sox were in first place. I would have asked the naked woman next to me to pinch me (after all, I was dreaming), but I figured that I'd just let the fantasy last as long as I could.
Butch

Terry,
Look, when you go to the toilet, you should probably keep whatever you wipe, just in case you ever get a brain tumor and the doctors want something to transplant.
Love,Sally

M.K.
How many drugs can one person do? Jesus, your body is beginning to look like Keith Richards' little finger. I mean, if you don't slow down and eat something like a sandwich soon I'm afraid that you're going to implode. Take it easy.
C.Z.

Kevin,
The only regularity I want to hear about in your life is your breathing. Get real, polite society dictates that bodily functions and the discussion of them be kept to an absolute minimum. Not that you know anything about polite society, pig. Love you bunches- hope it falls off.
Jennifer

Bloodsucking Kiddies,
Your petty attempt to get me off the council was a joke. Now you will know what it's like to really cross paths with your elders. You won't know what hit you, I can assure you.
Parovich

Stacy,
Silverstein?
Eggy

Meter Feeder,
Well then, thank God you aren't me.
Your Queen

Lynn,
If you bite me one more time, I swear I will go ballistic. I have never in my life met or even heard of someone who bites for fun like you do. I can deal with a little nibbling, but jeez, I feel like I'm first prize at a vampire raffle. I love you, but I wish you wore dentures, so I could hide them when you feel frisky.
Victim #1

Pauline at the treasurers office
Getting my co-workers to think of me on their off-time is something I must do very well, considering the trouble they go to trying to keep up with me. Being a PRO-MIKER is hard work. I've been told your office wants to join my crusade. I'll warn you that Anti-Mikers are sneaky. They only come out when you're not looking and then run and hide at the first hint of trouble. They are truly a farce to contend with.

Local Boys Make Good

Boston's stockbroker/novelist John Spooner turns his wry eye on four boys who come from a fictional town in Massachusetts he calls Brookwood. The caddying, and later golf-playing 'Foursome' (the book's title) include one Irish kid, a WASP, and two Jews whose ethnic differences – though held in the web of their lifelong friendship – are deliciously wrought, and the jostlings of their variety, especially in youth and adolescence, are part of the joy of this book. All four of them become rich and wildly successful in various branches of business, and though the individual tones of their successes vary, there's a Group Tone that unifies them, a witty, wise-guy sparring that can only be sustained by people deeply connected by long history and great affection. The book, full of places and conventions that Brook- (er) -Wood residents will recognize, rolls along across a forty year time span, gathering the moss of each period's quirks and values. The boys that Spooner portrays vividly, at times poignantly, and invariably comically, develop into grownups that feel like old friends by the book's end. Some of the social longings of Fitzgerald, and a lot of the raffish banter of Robert Parker, sparkle through The Foursome.

Women Who Run With The Spiritual Self

Ritual, in the balming sense of the word, refers to actions performed in the focused spirit of mystery, high purpose, soothing and energy. Done with other people, the occasion can take on a tone of harmonic glow. Two therapists, Tonia Vergou and Theresa Thompson, are offering a one-day workshop for women, in which a blend of music, dancing, writing, storytelling and a form of improvisational theater (which encourages participants to tap into archetypal identifications – the Wild Woman being the most current culturally visible one), will 'help women connect with different aspects of themselves,' including mythic and poetic elements which may be suppressed by the humdrum exigencies of ordinary life. But while both the real and the imaginary life will be called on, (one role-play will have people playing, alternately, the caregiver and the one caregiven-to – nothing so imaginary there), a participant may choose to act as an observer from a designated safe place. Women in the workshop will start to visualize what may have been neglected or unrecognized needs, and out of that, certain rituals have been devised to symbolically flower-and-fruit forth the message of those needs in aid of becoming real. They are gathering names for a workshop ($60, sliding scale available) on May 16, so call them soon for more information.

The Mud Below, The Parrot Above

Strollers in Inman Square are accustomed, if they time it right, to seeing a flurry of brightly-colored parrots stretching and squawking, when Mud Man, Interplanetary Potter Marc Johnson, brings them, mascots of sorts, out of his shop. Follow them inside and find a jungle of cloth palm trees and pottery, some of which is very traditional and some of which is very not. Trained in England, 'Mud Man' loves to make strawberry pots, a many-mouthed planter into which can be crammed a compressed garden of strawberries, or indeed ivy. And, because the chimney pots of London are so atmospheric, he's found they can also be replicated for a new use – housing tall skinny plants and flowers. He also has made some in plain earthenware, some with a Bart Simpson zigzag on top, some coiled with earthenware 'rope.' Because of his planetary leanings, many of Marc's plates and cups (even a custom-made bathroom sink) are imprinted with a planet motif, on a background sometimes earthy-colored and sometimes a glazed dreamy blue. Often, he is commissioned to make plates or pitchers to commemorate weddings and births, with weights and dates and names. Lines of poetry and an earthenware 'resume' of achievements have been variously ordered. An MIT department of earth sciences wanted award plates done, and knew his clay would sympathize. Unexpected pottery applications include a device for keeping butter cold, and a bird feeder, and it turns out that bread kept in an earthenware container doesn't get stale. Happily, some commissions involve extras, so if you see something you like, carpe diem.

6 Be A Wheel Watcher

Not so long ago, the "Wheel of Fortune" TV show rolled into town, huddled at the Wang Center, taped some shows, and then flew hurriedly back to L.A. While they were here, we got a small glimpse underneath the razzle-dazzle surface. We fell in love with Vanna, got lost in the Wang's basement and learned a little about Hollyweird. Read all about it.

Fitzgerald loved it; so did the Vanderbilts. Now you, too, can delight in the summer playground that is Newport, Rhode Island. Whether you're summering there, or just popping down for a weekend away from the sticky summer city, make sure you make the utmost of your time in Wonderland.

13 Citizen Dave

It's a classic tale, with a new cinematic twist. Kevin Kline stars in this summer's first potential blockbuster movie, about an ordinary Joe who just happens to resemble the Prez. What happens when the real Chief gets sick and Dave steps in? Will we finally become a kinder, gentler nation?

A Man For All Nealons

Kevin Nealon Comes to Boston and Brings His Comedy with Him

BY ROSS GARMIL

Kevin Nealon is a Renaissance man. Well, he's not really a Renaissance man. If he were, then he would have lived in the fifteenth century and we would not have a photograph of him to print along with this article. There would be an oil painting we could use, but we print in ink, and therein lies the problem. No, Mr. Nealon is a Renaissance man in the metaphorical sense. That is not to say that he is a physicist, poet, pianist, philosophe and painter rolled into one. Rather, it should be said that Nealon is a Renaissance man in terms of performing.

Kevin Nealon is a cast member/writer with "Saturday Night Live". And from this classic humorist position, Nealon proves himself a true Renaissance performer. Not that he puts on Shakespeare every week, although every once in a while he does wear a funny hat. The point is that Nealon –he plays subliminal man – is a versatile entertainer. He has created numerous characters in SNL, including Franz, of Hanz and Franz, –don't forget subliminal man – Tarzan, the baritone from the singing trio of Tarzan, Tonto, and Frankenstein – subliminal man is really funny.

Nealon also portrays more verbose characters, including Ganon P.I.P.I. (Politically Incorrect Private Investigator), one of his personal favorites, on which he reflects "that was fun" – why haven't you mentioned subliminal man, yet? – as well as Nealon's great manipulator of audiences, Subliminal Man – well, it's about time.

But beyond all this, Kevin Nealon has found his "Saturday Night Live" niche as the anchor for Weekend Update. Every week Nealon delivers the consistently best feature of the show in his own deadpan fashion.

As a Renaissance man, however, Nealon does much more than just the skit comedy on SNL. He likes to continually perform stand-up, as he did for nine years prior to joining the SNL cast. Why would a talented performer with a steady job feel the need to tour on the stand-up circuit? Well, for Nealon stand-up had been his "forte," and is a talent which he likes to keep in practice. "If you don't do it," Nealon relates, "you kind of lose it."

His act, while featuring some characters from SNL – he includes subliminal man – also contains humor less character dependent. "I went to the dentist last week," he jokes, "and I found out that my gums are starting to recede. But you can't really tell now, 'cause I comb them forward." Nealon also says that his comedy does contain some audience involvement, but he reassures that it is "nothing very threatening to the audience."

The Renaissance man also plans to venture into film. In the past he has played some smaller parts on the big screen. "In 'Roxanne' I played Drunk #2," he says. But on the horizon lay larger fish to fry. Nealon "just wrote a movie last summer called 'Hanz and Franz: The Girly Man Dilemma,'" a film initiated by Arnold Swarzenegger, who wishes to co-produce it and co-star along with Nealon and presumably Dana Carvey (Hanz). Nealon plans to stay with SNL for at least another year, but then may move on to "do films or maybe come up with a sitcom idea." It would seem that the Renaissance man is setting out to broaden his horizons.

Like all comedy writers, Nealon is afraid of forgetting his ideas, so how does he insure against this? "I write them down." Kevin Nealon, genius, Renaissance man. ❑

"It's not really a Hawaiian shirt," Nealon comments. "It's a casual shirt."

How do you pick up a Branch Dividian girl?
With a Dustbuster

Kudos to Joby Tapia of Arlington. Why does he earn a kudos? Because he sent in the winning joke, silly. By the way, the words kudos comes from the Greek meaning "praise." It is a singular noun, even though it ends in an "s," therefore never could it be written that a single kudo has been granted to someone. However, you should also not say "kudoses." Kudos is both singular and plural in one word, kind of like fish, except that fish swim in the ocean and kudos are granted to the lucky people who contribute the Jokes of the Every Other Week. So, it appears that kudos and fish don't have that much in common after all. For his effort of supplying this issue's joke, Mr. Tapia wins two tickets to the Comedy Connection in Faneuil Hall (fish not included).

Think that you deserve a kudos of your own? Well, then go ahead and mail, or FAX (what the hell, this is the 90's after all) your favorite joke to:

JOKE OF THE EVERY OTHER WEEK, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN
17 STATION STREET, SUITE 7A
BROOKLINE, MA 02146

I learned about the word "kudos" in college. A professor took some class time to complain about how the media misuses the word. I just hope that he's happy now.

AROUND TOWN

If your idea of a urban garden is your neighbor's blighted window box, and you feel like there's no green in your concrete jungle, listen up, because the Beacon Hill Garden Club is offering the public an opportunity to peak inside the "Hidden Gardens of Beacon Hill." From 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Thursday, May 20, rain or shine, the Club will allow you a self-guided tour through twelve gardens, some small and inventive, others grand. Tickets are available by mail for $15 (send stamped, self-addressed envelope with check to 1993 Tour, Box 302, Charles Street Station, Boston, 02114) or for $18 at day-of boothes, located on corners of Charles and Mt. Vernon. Either way, call 227-4392 for more.

For their season finale, The Pro Arte Chamber Orchestra of Boston and Gisele Ben-Dor welcome tenor Miguel Cortez and guitarist Ivan Rijos for a concert celebrating Hispanic culture. Rijos will be heard in the perennial "Concierto de Aranjuez" by Joaquin Rodrigo and Cortez will offer a selection of zarzuela arias. Continuing their long-standing commitment to new music, the Pro Arte will give the world premiere of "El Sueno de Cristobal" by Argentine composer Ezequiel Vifiao. Rounding out the program is Aaron Copland's "Three Latin American Sketches." The concert is at the Sanders Theater at 3 p.m. on Sunday, May 16, but if you get there an hour early, you can hear some of Pro Arte's members in their "Aperitif" featuring works by Turina and more Copland. If that's not enough, the "Ask the Artist" series follows the concert with Ben-Dor, Rijos, Cortez and Vinao fielding questions from the audience in English and Spanish. Tickets are $25.50, $18.50, $12.50 and $8.50. For further information call 661-7067.

Press your tuxedo and put on your dancing shoes for one of Boston's most anticipated parties of the year, the Museum of Fine Arts 12th Annual Spring Gala. This year the MFA will showcase the exhibition "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent, and the Great American Watercolor." Helping the MFA celebrate will be emcee Sara Edwards of WHDH-TV and Boston's premiere party band, Fat City. So come and "Paint the Town" at this glamorous spark in Boston's cultural night life. The gala will occur at the MFA on Saturday, May 15 from 8 p.m. till midnight. Tickets are $50 in advance ($70 at the door), and proceeds from the event will support the Museum Council. For tickets or information, call 267-9300.

Brookline's Coolidge Corner Theatre swells to capacity as the hordes vie for good seats. The smells of popcorn and cannabis sativa mingle while audience members bat balloons at each other. Silence descends as a scruffy man with a purple beard and penis necktie takes center stage. That's right – once again, Spike Decker and Mike Gribble subject Boston to the dubious delights of their Sick and Twisted Animation Festival. This adults-only animation festival opens with Porky Pig stuttering "Son of a bitch," and goes downhill from there – to the audience's delight. Anarchy reigns as toons copulate, masturbate, defecate, swear, and flip each other off. Disney buffs and right-wing fundamentalists need not apply. The festival runs weekends until May 16 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard Street, Brookline. Tickets cost $7.50 in advance, $8 at the door. For more information, call 734-2500.

"City Life" is the theme of the second international "Photo by Kids" exhibit that will be at The Wang Center through May 31 in the lower lobby of the theater. The exhibit is part of the educational outreach program Young at Arts, and will feature 80 photographs by students from Dearborn Middle School in Boston, Pickering Junior High School in Lynn, and Jan Ligthart school in Amsterdam. Through this program, American and Dutch students were encouraged to exchange their works and ideas. If you can't make it to the exhibit, don't fret; two books of the student photographs will be published this summer. For more information call The Wang Center at 482-9393.

WORLD BEHIND THE WHEEL

BY CHRISTOPHER FRANCESCANI

Americans love competition. We love easy money. We appreciate a sharp mind, and the visual aesthetics of a board that lights up with each new clue, leading us closer to a solution. We love games of chance and pressure. And we love Barbie dolls in $1000 sequin dresses.

When the mighty "Wheel of Fortune" crew rolled through town in April, Boston responded in kind by rolling out its red carpet for Pat Sajak and Vanna White, TV's reigning monarchs of game show royalty. Two weeks of shows, to be aired nationally the weeks of May 10 and 17, were taped Easter weekend at Tremont Street's Wang Center.

When the Wheel's impending arrival was announced, the Wang Center received more than 100,000 inquiries. Compare that with the 20,000 responses they received after announcing that the Broadway hit "Phantom of the Opera" was en route. Wang Center President and General Manager Josiah Spaulding said at a press conference that he'd never seen anything like it. Greater Boston Convention and Visitor Bureau President Patrick Moscaritolo gushed over Pat and Vanna, noting that the Wheel's spin through Boston would bring in an estimated 36 million dollars in tourism revenues for the city between the months of May and December, 1993.

Vanna Displays Our Fantasy Puzzle

Vanna White has unwittingly taken the image of the dumb blonde and done for it what NASA has done for space travel. Feminist critics have contended that she is a detriment to the progress of women's liberation, being paid a fortune to look pretty, keep quiet, and turn letters on command (sort of a "barefoot and pregnant" for the showbiz industry). "It's a job," she says. "That's what it is, and that's what I take it as. I have fun with it, and I have for ten years." What about other aspirations? "I hope to continue doing it for ten more years," she says, flashing those famous teeth. Wouldn't you? Really?

On the set at the Wang Center, stage technician Steve Schwartz is defending Vanna to a Channel 7 news crew. "When I light [a letter] up, Vanna goes to it," he explains. "Generally, she is already on her way. All we do is flash her a copy of the puzzle, right before she goes on....if you notice, she'll get there before I do. She's gotta be in the game the whole time. People think that Vanna just sits there and claps, and just looks good up on the stage, but really, she has to think, she has to know what the puzzle is, she has to be ready." One word – pressure.

I sit down on a chair in some remote corner of the maze, and I stare at my shoes. Footsteps approach, and it's her. She's all alone. I smile, shake her hand, and run rapidly through my routine about wanting to talk with her when she has a moment. As I babble, I discover one of the first secrets of Vanna-ty is her sequins. They make her sparkle.

With more than 100 million weekly viewers around the world, Wheel reaches as many, or more, people on a weekly basis than does a Papal address, a presidential inauguration, or the "Tonight Show." More than fifty times as many people watch Wheel weekly as read the Sunday New York Times (sociologists can tear that one apart on their own time).

Wheel is a media wet dream. If there was ever an opportunity to slowly, sub-consciously ingratiate the public consciousness towards a major international issue, say the environment, there could be no better medium than Wheel. Its power as an potentially influential culture-defining vehicle is inestimable, a slow-witted media gorilla unaware of its own strength. One hundred million people around the world watch Wheel every week. It's so easy to get used to Pat and Vanna. You trust them. You wouldn't think, wouldn't have reason to think that...well, forget it.

Vanna is wearing pink house slippers on her feet, beneath a $1000 Black Tie evening gown, as we stand together in an empty hallway. I notice that she has lipstick on her teeth as she flashes me her seven-figure smile. "You have lipstick on your teeth," I say, smiling. She grins, takes her finger and wipes her teeth. The barrier has been broken, familiarity achieved. She smiles again. She's always smiling. She says, "How about [doing the interview] right now, while I put on my makeup?" I smile, wincing. I have nothing prepared.

100 Million Vanna Fans Can't Be Wrong

mouth of the Wang Center, sidestepping security with my press pass, and descend into the building's depths, following a succession of snaking staircases through the midsections, and into the basement. I set up in the press room, check my recorder for the thirty-third time, and wander the maze-like corridors underneath the stage, trying to think of questions to approach Vanna with, on the off-chance that I get her alone for a moment.

What Wheel's creator Merv Griffin has done is take a child's game called Hangman, a real-live Barbie doll, a shorter, less-chiseled but cuter Ken sidekick, and made television history. Wheel is the most widely viewed television game show in history. It is the number one program in syndication today, the number one program in syndication history, it airs in 21 foreign territories, and boasts the irreplaceable Vanna White, who was recorded in the most recent Guinness Book of World Records as "television's most frequent clapper."

Wheel is a common man's "Jeopardy." You don't have to be a rocket scientist to get on the show, just a sharp everyman with an eye for phonetics. There are no buzzers to smash apart in a frenzied rush to beat back your opponents, no stupid, pre-fabricated California putting-green games, offering desperate contestants the rare opportunity of making absolute fools of themselves on national television. Wheel is relatively dignified.

It's hosted by Sajak, a low-key MC, whose soft-spoken, kid-glove wit keeps everything running smoothly. Contestants take turns, like children being taught manners, and each letter request is inevitably followed by a hopeful, almost pleading "please." Please, Vanna, turn those damned boxes and please, Vanna, make me a millionaire.

I sit perched on a stool and watch her put on makeup. Silk clings to Vanna's body as if it were skin, riding the curves and slopes of her figure like a Maserati on the Autobahn. She says something funny and laughs. I laugh. I offer to take her out to dinner. She smiles. I smile. She goes back to her makeup. I ask her about being such a big star. She tells me that people don't think of her as a star, that people see her as their next-door neighbor, "because I'm in their living room every night." I begin to wonder what life would be like with Vanna as my next-door neighbor. Lots of free carpet cleaner.

Wheel is sanitized gambling. You spin a wheel colored with monetary denominations, take chances, make split-second decisions, and aim your aspirations at the heart of the American dream: easy money. What makes this international media casino so lucrative is that there's no loss, no repercussions for the losers. The winners go home with cars, cash and trips, and the losers go home with a great story and a ten-year supply of Geritol tablets. The adage "nothing ventured, nothing gained" has never been more appropriate (ask B.U. sophomore Joe Sfarra - or just see the sidebar).

We sit and chit-chat about normal media things: how fame has changed her (not at all), how the tabloids relentless attacks affect her (not at all), how she feels about her critics, who contend she is not helping shape the psyche of the contemporary liberated woman (she could care less what they say, she loves her job), and throughout almost the entire conversation, my tape recorder, sitting dutifully on her makeup table, has been on pause.

Sajak and White have less-than-grueling schedules for the show. They tape 39 days a year. Much of that time is spent taking perfect strangers, putting them on international television, and giving them money. They make the contestants the stars. As Sajak has said, "I try not to do too much because...one of the things you have to remember when you're hosting a game show is that as charming and delightful as you may think that you are, the people at home really are watching to see the people solve the puzzle, and if you can add to it, and say something in passing and move over it pretty quickly that's fine. But if you start trying to turn it into a variety show with you as the star I think that you're going to turn people off pretty quickly." Alex Trebek, take note.

Wheel is a showcase for intelligent (or strikingly ignorant) contestants, where the spotlight is kept on the contestants as much as is possible, though keeping Vanna White out of the spotlight must be like keeping water out of the ocean.

Having finally switched my recorder off pause, I point the little machine towards her, smile (always smile when you're hanging out with VW), and ask her the only question I can think of that she can't easily dodge. It's a loaded question, a spur-of-the-moment, last-ditch effort to get beyond the show business facade, beyond the makeup, and get down to some real meat-and-potatoes journalism.

"If you were thrown into competition, say, for another man's heart, against Hillary Clinton, Marla Maples, or Camille Paglia, who would you be most intimidated by?" For a moment, the room is a blanket of silence. More like a wool quilt of silence. I hold my breath. I imagine this is the most challenging question that has been put to her all day (what with another reporter challenging her earlier, "Do you [and Pat] really, truly have a great relationship off-camera?").

Vanna clicks her tongue, smiles, and turns to me. She has solved the puzzle, knows the answer. "I'm not really intimidated by anyone...I think that we're all created equal in here [she extends glittering fingernails over her sequined chest], in our hearts, and that's the way I look at people. I know that sounds mushy, but it's true. I think a garbage collector is as important as the President of the United States."

I wonder if Bill Clinton takes the garbage out before or after Wheel of Fortune. Probably after.

VOWEL BUYING 101

LOCALS SPIN THE WHEEL

Bostonian Joe Sfarra was a contestant on "Wheel of Fortune's" recent taping, representing Beantown in national competition. Sfarra explains that he saw a sign in the fall of '92, signed up, and was picked in March as one of 125 people competing for four spots.

The competition took place on March 25, at B.U.'s George Sherman Union Building. At 1:30 on that fateful afternoon, the lucky 125 gathered to compete, and by five o'clock that evening, Sfarra walked out. He'd made the cut. He would be one of his batch's four "Wheel of Fortune" contestants.

The initial test for the 125 would-be contestants was a five minute, 16-puzzle test, made up of partially filled-in puzzles. "I sat there and stared at the thing for the first two or three minutes," Sfarra says, "and didn't touch pencil to paper. I was panicked. We all were. After a couple of minutes, I looked over at my friend, and she was jamming. She had most of it done. So I just went to it, and in that last couple minutes got probably 12 of the 16 puzzles."

With part one done, the Wheel people kept 32 of them, and dismissed the rest. With the remaining 32, a simulated game was played, using a "mini-wheel." Each contestant was given two chances. During his turn, Sfarra solved a puzzle ("It was total luck," he vows), and guessed three letters. Next, the group was sized down to 16, and questioned as to why they wanted to be on Wheel, and why they thought they could represent their city well. Your basic interrogation.

After listening to a succession of his fellow contestants shmoozy, kiss-ass answers, Sfarra got up, looked his interviewers in the eye, and asked, "It's Wheel of Fortune, do I really need a reason?" They bought it, and he survived the next round.

Sfarra got up, looked his interviewers in the eye, and asked, "It's Wheel of Fortune, do I really need a reason?" They bought it, and he survived the next round.

The 16 remaining players were put together in varying sized groups and made to play practice games and head-to-head games, while being drilled further about their aspirations. What had been sort of laughably fun, suddenly became deadly serious. This round, Sfarra describes as "the tensest moments of my entire life. Everyone was terrified, and no one was talking to anyone else."

Eight more were dismissed.

The final eight consisted of one woman and seven men, competing for the final four positions. "We all knew that [Tara, one of the players] was going to make it, so that left only three places for seven of us." Cold sweat time.

The interrogation continued. More questions. More games. Polaroids. Documents signed, puzzles solved. More Polaroids. More games. More questions.

Sfarra was the last one picked. Four lucky Boston residents – Sfarra, Tara Thomas, Matt Tanzer, and B.U. law student Mike McNamara – were called into a room with the Wheel staff, and, after being congratulated, were told that one of the four of them would not necessarily be on the show. One of the group, they explained, would be used as a possible alternate on the regular show over the next year ("For legal purposes," they cryptically explained) and the remaining three would participate in the May competition.

To find out who made it out of this group and how they did, and to watch other Boston residents compete, tune in to Channel 7, WHDH-TV weekdays through May 21, at 7 p.m. And watch out, or you too will be sucked in, suddenly finding yourself a "Wheel Watcher."

Newport Cometh

Heathen Delights in the Approaching Sun Season

By Nicole L. Mills

Ask almost anybody in Boston what is on their top three list of things to do this summer, and inevitable the answer will come back "Newport, Newport, and, oh yes, Newport." The novice might naively inquire "Why would anyone with a viable claim to sanity want to fork over around $6000 for a summer rental, which they only actually sleep in two nights out of the week tops, in Rhode Island, of all places, which allows them to hang around with exactly the same people they've been carping about back in Boston all winter?" Well, the only answer is, these poor people have obviously not experienced the hedonistic pleasures of Newport.

Newport began its illustrious career as "the" summer hot spot of the northeast by hosting a plethora of urban refugees around the turn of the century, all of whom had too much time and money on their soft, white hands. Although Newport experienced a slight recessionistic decline in popularity after this breed of big spender died out, the town has returned triumphant upon the social scene, amongst those twenty- to thirty-somethings anxious to hook onto a bit of Newport's heyday glamor. Newport still retains its elitist appeal, although long-time Newport insiders, even pseudo-snob newcomers, lament the influx of too many tourists, and less cultured weekenders. "It's turning into another Cape Cod," they sniff.

A Friday night in June is the best way to start. Escape from whatever urban peon job you slave away at during the week. Cash what passes for your paycheck, navigate Route 24 from Fall River and view before you the site of all delights; Newpie, in all its finery.

Natch, no summer vakay is complete without access to some kind of body of water bigger than a backyard wading pool. On the eastern side of the peninsula which makes up Newport is a strip of beaches, each with its own personality. However, the only two you need to worry about, insider that you are, are Seconds, (where sun worshippers expose inordinate amounts of skin and flex their pecs like American Gladiators gearing up for a big show, volleyballs crash into unsuspecting victims, and everyone tries to disguise their alcoholic beverages as Big Gulps) and members-only Bailey's Beach (if you can weasel a membership. If not, you can always try sneaking onto Bailey's and making like you belong there. Most have done it at least once.).

For the love birds and romantic at heart, try a picnic en plein air at Gooseberry Beach. If you're serious about enjoying the great outdoors, and are constantly looking for places to "frolic" in ways your mother probably wouldn't approve of, try the rocks along Ocean Drive, any of the nooks and crannies way below Castle Hill, or, if you're really feeling adventurous, the surfer statue in town.

For those who would rather spend their time on the water than in it, Newport is a sailor's paradise. Fleets of boats are luffing their sails in the never-ending parade of regattas that takes place over the summer. Hordes of hungry and horny international boat trash flotsam and jetsam their way about the waterfront, looking for love and someone to practice their knots on (if anyone asks you if you want to climb their rigging, BEWARE).

If the motion of the ocean makes you green, then you're butt-outta-luck in Newport baby, because it's absolutely de rigeur to have some sort of sailing association here, and nobody can climb very high up the social ladder without it. There are scads of land-lubbers crawling the streets of Newport trying to fake their sea legs by prancing around in blue and white nautical striped clothing (which few people actually look good in), sleeping with sailors, or boasting loudly about their "boat" to everybody within ear shot, even when the craft in question is nothing but a blow-up raft with a holder for a beer can.

We suggest skipping all the mock pretentiousness and embarassing babbling about wind direction and tides, putting on your admiral's hat and heading out to Castle Hill on a sunny Sunday. Castle Hill is such the "in" place to go, it's almost "out." This is really the only place to spend the afternoon with everybody who's anybody, kicking back and enjoying the view of the boats and all those fresh sea breezes (both the drink and the real thing.)

If you have a completely socially acceptable reason for being away from the water, such as "I'm watching my brother play polo," or "I have a big international crocquet match today," then you may justifiably seek out other dry land activities in Newport. We can suggest some locales that will put you in shoulder-rubbing proximity with all the right people: croquet and lawn tennis events at the Tennis Hall of Infamy, dodging balls and stampeding ponies and then dancing around to stamp down the divots between chukkas at the Newport International Polo Series, the JVC Jazz Festival and the Ben & Jerry's Folk Festival (where the term "grass roots" takes on a whole new meaning). If you crave refinement and social niceties, you can slip into your tea-length dress or seersucker suit, and fill out your dance card at one of the Thes Dansantes at Beechwood, the Astor's humble little "cottage."

The Pelham, Land of Liquid Delights

These charming daylight activities aside, the real pulse and throb of a Newport summer isn't totally apparent until you've experienced the Four D's: Dining, Drinking, Dancing, and Doing the Wild Thang. On any given weekend evening, throngs of people mill around Bannister's Wharf and Thames Street, looking for dates and places to eat and start off their soirees. The Black Pearl and the Mooring tie for best place to hang outside, flaunt your tan, sip frosty beverages, get in the mood to conquer the town, and study the action. Dinner could be at the Chart House, Zelda's, Scales and Shells, or if you're really feeling flush, the Clarke Cook House.

Cheap eats in 'SNewport, if you're conserving your pennies for the second big D, can be found at Tito's Tacos, Sig's (for subs) or Little Caesar's, but don't be gauche enough to tell anyone you meet later in the evening that you ordered pizza for dinner; just say that you "dined in" with your house mates.

After you've fueled up, the fun can really begin, because, as we all know, the sunning, the dining, the dolling up and the schmoozing are just preludes to the wild hunting and chasing that goes on after the sun sets. There are many spots to raise your body temperature in Newport, and most of them have more than one kind of attraction. For example, the Ark has drinking and cool jazz; the Pelham has drinking and dance fever (but watch out for the black pond scum that seems to burst into existence and crawl up your leg after dancing on the beer-soaked floor); Oceancliffe has drinking and reggae bands. All the hot spots in Newport tend to cater to a certain societal niche, and it is possible that you won't be able to get in to some club or bar because you don't fit the mold; however, we offer a few helpful tips that should gain you easier access to just about anywhere.

The first tip is: dress appropriately. Remember that while Newport is an upscale place, it's a down-time upscale place, and you're here on vacation. Don't break out your Ivana Trump sequined number or your tuxedo just to stroll along Thames Street and hit the bars; you'll look like a pretentious yo-yo, and even if you are a pretentious yo-yo, it's the last thing you want to look like. Casual-to-preppy chic is the rule to live by.

The second tip is: become a regular. If you start going to the same places often, the door crew will let you in regardless of what you're wearing, and you'll be able to impress all your friends when you scoot by everyone waiting in the interminable line outside.

Tip number three is: bring money. This should only be used as a last resort, because it is kind of tacky...but if you absolutely must, slip the right person a twenty, allowing them to ignore your social shortcomings and let you in. This tactic is most often employed by New Yorkers, who can't seem to get through a night without tipping or bribing someone.

Even employing all these suggestions, you still might not get into the Candy Store, which is the ultimate Newport night spot. It has drinking, dancing and our favorite chi chi people. Everybody is dressed better because the Candy Store thinks it's a New York kind of club, and they won't let you in if they don't like your shoes. This thankfully screens out people who wear white before Memorial Day, and those who go out at night wearing sunglasses (puhl-eez), leaving the rest of us to happily enjoy the scenery.

For the multiple private parties and exclusive events (like the Gatsby Ball at Rosecliff, the Night in White at Beechwood or the Hot Hot Hot party at the Viking), which go on almost every weekend of a Newport summer, you're more or less on your own, because you'll have to pull your own connections or hit up whichever Von Bulow it is that you think you know to get you on the guest list, or pony up some cash for a pricey invite.

Wherever it is that you've spent the hours between 9 p.m. and 1 a.m., if you haven't met the love of your life (or at least of your night), you can stumble back to Bannister's Wharf, known in certain circles as the "Love Canal," where you can join the other crazed and reeling revelers who are in search of an after-hours party. It's some kind of unwritten law in Newport society that you really shouldn't admit defeat and return home until at least 4 a.m., so you need to find somewhere to spend the wee hours, even if it's only playing Pachesi at your neighbors'.

Whatever it is you find to do, however, try to do it quietly, because Newport has a city ordinance against noise between the hours of 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. It's probably not worth the $200 dollars or the night in the clink just to go through your primal scream therapy at 3 a.m., but then again, it's your choice. As long as we're not in jail, we're really not that interested in what happens to you, unless of course, you were the person we had planned on going to Castle Hill with the next day. In that case, be sure someone springs your bail so you can be out and about for the last gasp of your Newport weekend, because every moment counts in the playground by the sea. ❑

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Bodies, Rest & Motion

Even though there are many comings and goings in director Michael Steinberg's desert tale, no one really goes anywhere and nothing happens. But that's the point. Beth (Bridget Fonda) loses Nick (Tim Roth) when he decides to leave town. She sleeps with Sid (Eric Stolz). Sid falls in love with Beth. Sid loses Beth. And so on. Phoebe Cates, who plays Nick's ex-girlfriend and Beth's best friend, doesn't lose or find anybody; she is at rest, at least temporarily, and drinks or gets stoned. The movie is exasperating, even silly at times, but other times it shimmers like a mirage in the desert. K. Wilson

El Mariachi

Twenty-four-year-old director Robert Rodriguez made this action picture for $7,000, and it is great fun. A young mariachi singer gets caught in the middle of deadly feud between a vicious drug lord,Moco and his murderous partner Azul. The movie opens with a wonderfully-edited prison ambush sequence and speeds towards its Road Warrior-like conclusion. The glaring absence of special effects make the low budget chase scenes especially entertaining. The amateur cast is surprisingly good, especially co-writer Carlos Gallardo as the mariachi and Paul Marquardt as Moco. In Spanish, with subtitles. K. Wilson

Indecent Proposal

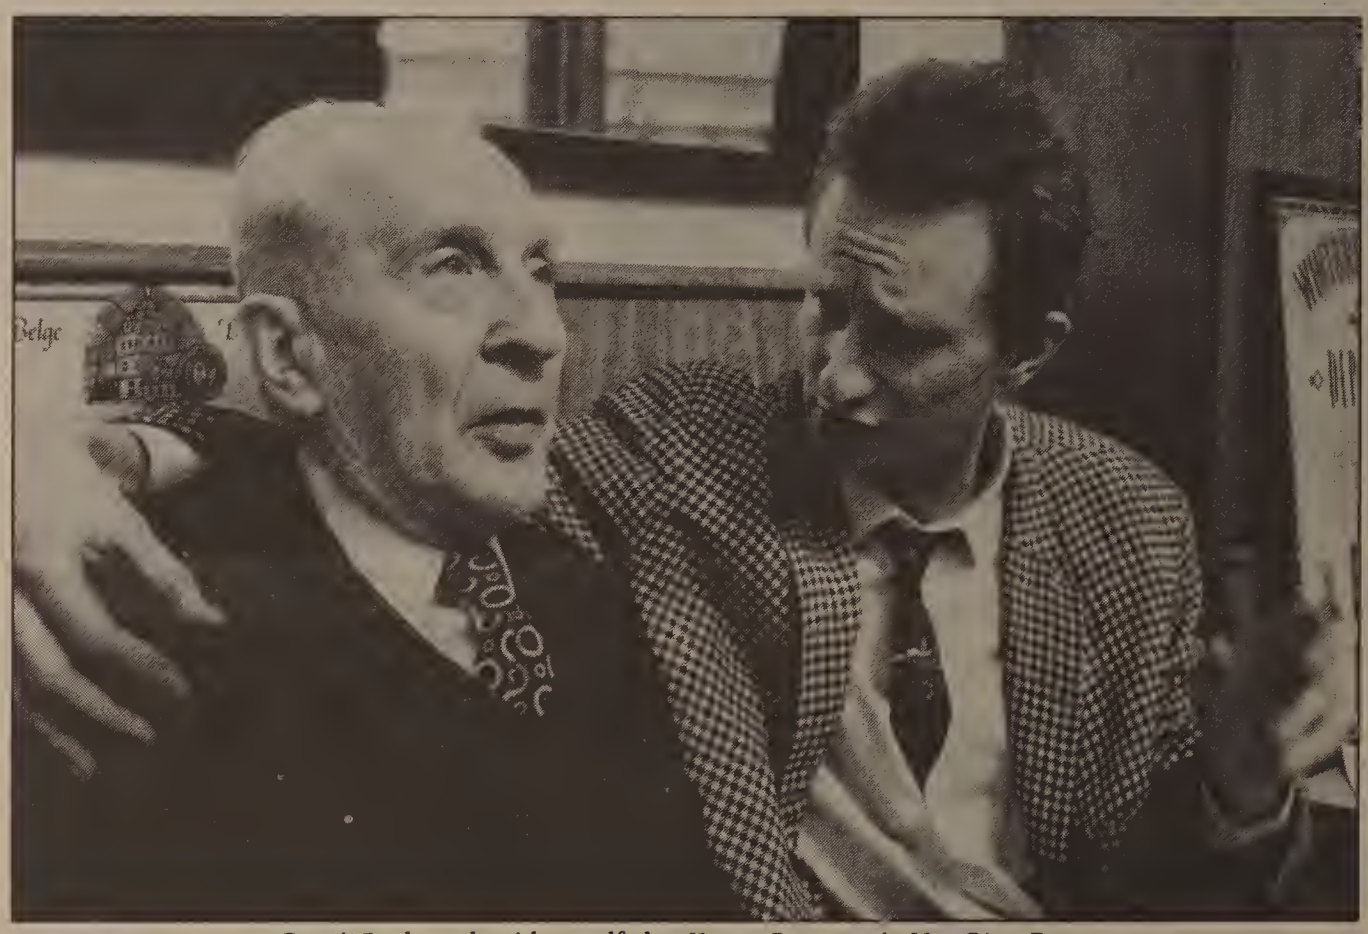
Diana (Demi Moore) and David Murphy (Woody Harrelson) are deeply in love (they have sex and say "I love you," a lot). But they are desperate for money, so when a handsome billionaire (Robert Redford) offers them a million dollars for a night with Diana, they take him up on it. There's no denying director Adrian Lyne's considerable talent; he keeps this insubstantial soufflé rising until the very end when it collapses into a sticky puddle. Like Pretty Woman, Indecent Proposal is a cynical paean to our consumer society disguised as a romance. K. Wilson

The Last Days of Chez Nous

A decade-and-a half of evolving women's liberation consciousness informs the best films of Austalian director, Gillian Armstong. This includes her latest, The Last Days of Chez Nous, a touching elegy to an irreparably broken modern marriage. Lisa Harrow is wonderful as Beth, the film's heroine, who has a shaky marriage, a daughter who loves her, and a successful career. But Beth wonders if she's selfish, unlovable, too competent. Should she have another baby? The film can be interpreted as Feminism Defended. G. Peary

Like Water for Chocolate

In Mexico, the expression "like water for chocolate" means to be agitated or sexually aroused. True to its title, director Alfonso Arau's Like Water For Chocolate, telis a tale of love, lust, food, and foment in the tradition of Latin American magic realism, but with a feminist spin. Forbidden by family tradition to marry the love of her life (who marries her oldest sister instead, just to be near her), Tita expresses her sorrow, anger and passion through food. The movie is a delightful, lively romance complete with a wicked-witch of a mother, handsome revolutionaries and leather, lace, and candles. K. Wilson



INDEPENDENT'S DAY

Gerald Peary Picks & Pans the Independents

BY GERALD PEARY

Man Bites Dog

Directed by Remy Belvaux. Written by Belvaux, Andre Bonzel, Benoit Poelvoorde, and Vincent Tavier. At the Coolidge Corner Moviehouse.

Benoit Poelvoorde with grandfather Hector Papparet in Man Bites Dog

In a bat of an eye, a stranger on a train is strangled, and, even before its opening credits, Man Bites Dog kicks in as a serial killer marathon. Eventually, it becomes a mountain of the dying, a river of the dead. As the movie's brute protagonist, Ben (Benoit Poelvoorde), explains his busy calendar, "I like to begin the month with a mailman."

Ben's speedy murder of Mr. Postman segues into virtuoso weeks of frightening shootings, gruesome bludgeonings, and other creepy, indescribably gory deeds. All on screen. All for the camera.

Yes, Ben just loves to kill, and he lives to talk about it, and to demonstrate precisely how his trade is done. Energetic, enthusiastic, a storyteller and a showman, delightfully uninhibited before a camera, he's a natural subject for a hard-copy, real-life dramatic profile.

Man Bites Dog, a Belgian fiction documentary, feigns to be a bonafide documentary-in-the making, going behind the scenes as a raggedy, probably post-graduate school film crew of three (director, sound, camera) who follow Ben about and photograph as he zealously spills blood.

Is this your kind of movie?

If your eyes automatically shut down at violence, and you mutter and kvetch, "Why do movies have to be so depressing?," stay home with your fried green tomatoes, water for chocolate, and passion fish. But if you crave a film which is truly brave, brazen, devious, outrageous, and which shoves your nose into the muck in which we live, Man Bites Dog is for you.

But also – get ready for this – Man Bites Dog is incredibly funny, in a macabre, gallows humor kind of way, though the audience I saw it with at the Coolidge seemed too shocked to catch the humor everywhere.

In Man Bites Dog, the film crew gets caught up in Ben's crimes. They dictate what murders they'd like him to perform, they delight when he offers to pump his profits (he kills, then robs) into their increasingly expensive documentary about him. Finally, they simply join in, shooting away at a rival video crew, holding the legs of a young boy as Ben offs him with a pillow.

Amazingly, the writer / directors /technicians of Man Bites Dog double as the complicit film crew, using their real-life names on-screen. Actor Benoit Poelvoorde, who plays homicidal Ben to the hilt, also co-wrote the brilliant script. Poelvoorde's off-screen mother, grandfather, grandmother, play the psycho killer's family.

Man Bites Dog is an important commentary on the media as a more-than-willing partner in the murderous world around us. But there's an even more profound observation: movies seem to have an affinity for violence, with blood attracted to celluloid like flies landing on honey.

"I am the cinema!" Ben proclaims, singing and dancing down the street, blasting his gun through montages and jump cuts.

Man Bites Dog is nothing less than a demented tribute to Jean Luc Godard's nihilist classic Breathless, thirty years later. Killer Ben is Jean-Paul Belmondo of Breathless meets Al Bundy of "Married With Children." If you've never seen it, check out Breathless at your video store before a crazy night out with Man Bites Dog. ❑

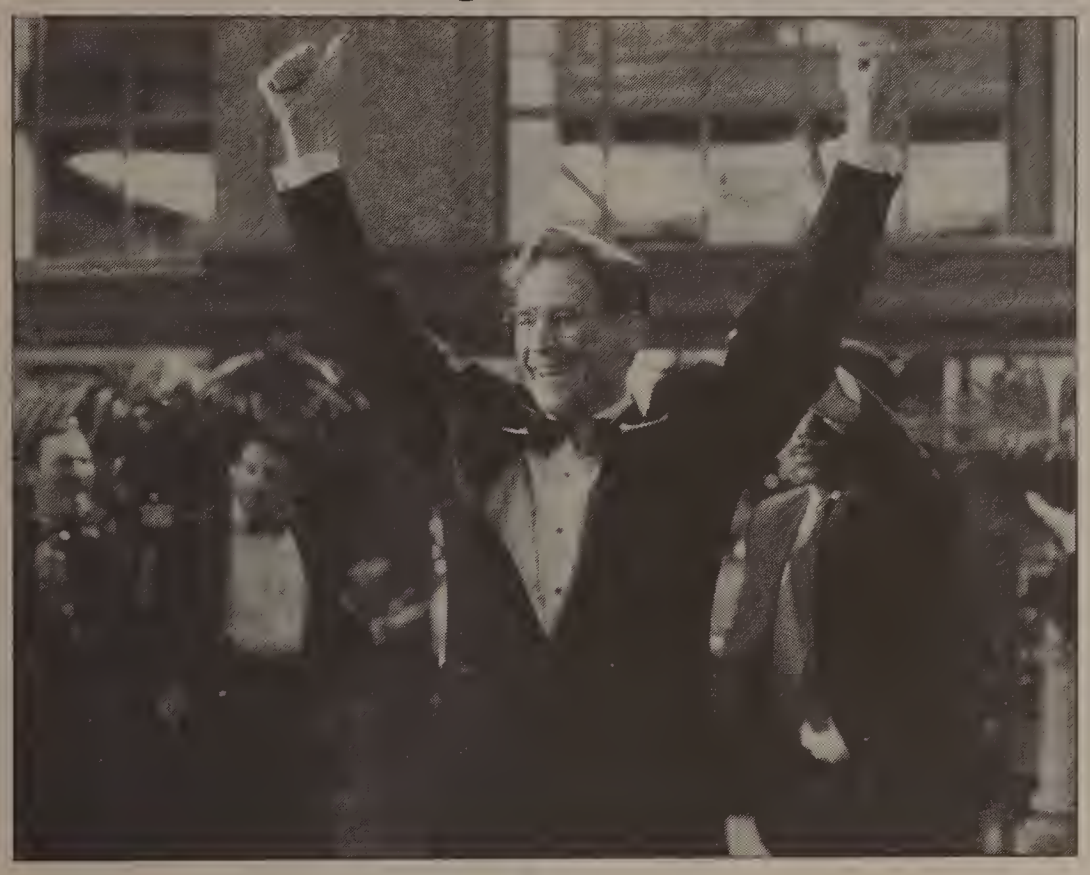
DAVE

Mr. Civilian Goes To Washington



BY KAJ WILSON

DAVE
Directed by Ivan Reitman. Written by Gary Ross.

Dave, Ivan Reitman's Capra-esque comedy about an ordinary guy who suddenly becomes President of the United States, was in the works long before the presidential election, and had Bush won, it would play like a stink-bomb lobbed into a window of the White House. Instead, Dave gleefully adds insult to injury and kicks the Republicans in the pants after they've already been shown the door.

Dave Kovic (Kevin Kline) is a high-spirited, warm-hearted guy who runs a temporary agency out of a brick storefront on the Main Street of an all-American town (only this Main Street has been updated to include people who aren't white and who don't speak English). Dave is up with people, the democratic process, and good, honest work; he's an overgrown boy scout and a bit of a goof-ball.

As he looks a lot like the President of the United States, Bill Mitchell (also played by Kline), a mean, tight-assed Yalie (who looks a little like George Bush), Dave is recruited by the Secret Service as a stand-in. However, when the President falls gravely ill, Dave's temporary job turns into a full-time occupation. Soon, Dave is setting an agenda that gives compassion top priority over self-interest, pitting him and Ellen Mitchell, the President's estranged wife (Sigourney Weaver), against his predatory Chief of Staff, Bob Alexander (Frank Langella) and spin doctor, Alan Reed (Kevin Dun).

Kevin Kline enjoys being the big guy in Dave.

Dave and Bob are perfect foils for one another. Bob (a take-off on Alexander "I'm in Charge" Haig) is ruthless, imposing, handsome and has no redeeming social value: he's marvelous. Kline and Langella's performances are broad, playful, cartoonish, and utterly winning. Dave is a clown: he falls out of his chair, babbles when nervous and bursts spontaneously into song ("Louie Louie" seems to have become the unofficial U.S. national anthem). Bob stalks his prey, rolls his eyes and glowers. (Bob used to be a good red, white and blue name. Recently it's become the devil's nickname. Think of Bob from "Twin Peaks" and Tim Robbins' right-wing Bob Roberts.)

Dave has a gold mine of a supporting cast including Ben Kingsley as the V.P., Charles Grodin as Dave's pal Murray Blum, and Ving Rhames as a Secret Service operative. And Dave is to the Fourth Estate and the Beltway what The Player is to Hollywood: Larry King, John McLaughlin, Kathleen Sullivan, Tip O'Neill, and Senator Paul Simon, to name a few, all play themselves. (Remember the line, the one between entertainment and the news that was said to be blurring? You don't have to worry about it anymore; it's gone.)

Dave loses its edge and energy whenever it becomes sincere, as when Dave wins over a homeless child, the press, and Ellen all at the same time. Sigourney Weaver's performance is surprisingly unplayful and her budding romance with Dave has no fizz. And why does Reitman waste our time with a cloying, simple-minded, feel-good message that an ordinary white guy can change this country with common sense (small-town businessman Murray Blum helps Dave figure out the national budget) and by doing the right thing? Dave does, however, make you think about another young, enthusiastic, extremely extroverted President, who, we hope, will also not be afraid of making enemies even if he risks being a short-timer. ❑

MAP OF THE HUMAN HEART

Director Vincent Ward's latest film – about an Innuit Eskimo (Jason Scott Lee) and the half-Indian/half-European love of his life who are caught up in the marvels and the horrors of the white man's world – is a clunker. This is not because it's so bad, but because big chunks of the movie don't connect; they're like icebergs breaking off from the mainland and floating away. Ward bombards us with repetitive images; X-rays and maps appear so often that they lose their meaning. Too many show-stopping aerial shots do just that: stop the show and overwhelm the viewer. The movie makes you snow blind. But make no mistake: Ward has talent and his clunker is worthier than many "successful" movies. K. WILSON

OLIVIER OLIVIER

Though there are no Nazis nor heart-breaking scenes in the Warsaw Ghetto as there were in Europa Europa (director Agnieszka Holland's most recent film), her Olivier Olivier is far darker in spirit, and weirder. Set in contemporary rural France, the young Olivier rides off on his bike and disappears. A few years later the Parisian police return a kinky Parisian teenager claiming to be Olivier to the bosom of a family that was screwed up even before his disappearance. Psychologically dense, the tale climaxes in black magic and mystery, with even a shaky claim to happiness. G. PERRY

THIS BOY'S LIFE

Michael Caton-Jones' film of Tobias Wolff's autobiography presents a small triumph of the human spirit. Toby, a young teenager (Leonardo DiCaprio), moves all over the country with his mother (Ellen Barkin, doing her best acting in years), who is looking to escape abusive relationships and find a decent job. When her spirits flag temporarily, she marries a bullying auto mechanic (Robert De Niro), who lives in the remote town of Concrete. De Niro gives a surprisingly one-note performance; he's convincing when he's flinging his son against the refrigerator or brutalizing Barkin in bed, but he lacks subtlety. He's so intent on being "intense," that he ruins the quiet moments which could have given the film true resonance. However, Leonardo DeCaprio's performance is simply outstanding: honest, heartfelt, and utterly without guile.
A. LEIBS

WATCH IT

The title refers to a game of one-upsmanship played by a household of thirtysomething, long-time male buddies who won't grow up. At its most primitive the game is played by jumping out of refrigerators or cupboards and yelling "Watch it!" Some stunts are quite creative. All are nasty. The game is symptomatic of the men's need to be in control and their fear of getting close to each other and, of course, to women. Peter Galliher plays a nice guy who attempts to re-establish a relationship with his cousin Michael from whom he has been estranged since childhood. Michael Is a handsome, remorseless womanizer who goes in for the kill when Galliher falls for his ex-girlfriend. Ultimately, Galliher uses the game to force change on the household and get what he wants. Jon Tenney as Rick, a sheep in wolf's clothing (he's a cross between the two cousins) provides the zip in a movie that slows down in the middle. K. WILSON

Museum of Fine Arts "Awash in Color"

Water Focused Watercolors

BY KATHY MATHESON

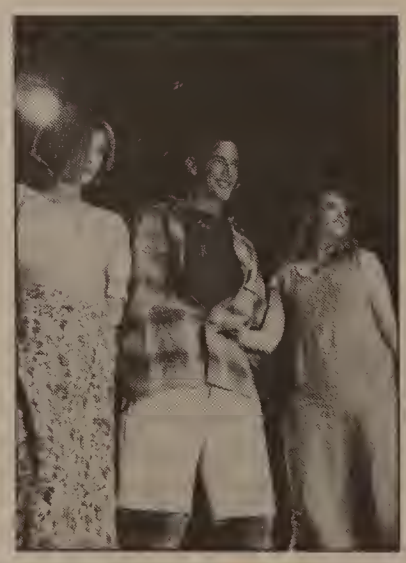
Does the title "The Great American Watercolor" make you think of those, well, "abstract" paintings of yours that Mom hung on the refrigerator with those little ladybug magnets? Luckily, there are people in this world with a more sophisticated view of watercolor; even better, they have put some of the most renowned works together in a show at the Museum of Fine Arts called "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." Although the exhibit contains 125 works, the museum's collection – reportedly one of the finest in the world – totals nearly 2,000 pieces.

While art scholars generally recognize American watercolors as the best examples of this medium, visitors to the MFA are doubly blessed because they are not only seeing superior art, but they will recognize many of the settings: the Adirondacks, Newport, Vermont, the Berkshires, Boston and— I kid you not— Revere Beach. (It turns out that the North Shore was one of Prendergast's favorite vacation spots, and unless you read the accompanying text, you'd never believe that his beautiful watercolor depicts an area now dominated by big hair and bikinis.)

Spending an afternoon with these paintings is probably the best way to celebrate advent of spring and the imminent arrival of summer. Like the nature slowly coming back to life around us, all of the works on display are, truly, "awash in color;" Your only regret may be that the pictures are too small. Whereas most Impressionist canvases are large enough to allow yourself to fall into the lush landscape of Giverny, for example, these watercolors are fairly small in size and require a careful eye to inspect the work that went into them.

If only there was more to love. ❑

"Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor" runs through Aug. 15 at the MFA.



"The Blue Boat," 1892, Winslow Homer, watercolor on paper.

"Suit Your Self"

ICA's Currents '93: Dress Codes

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

What, you may ask yourself, could Tom Brokaw, Burt Reynolds, Elton John, and Slash possibly have in common ?

Well, besides the fact that they all possess disastrous coifs, what these icons of popular culture do have in common is that they are all linked with one of the hippest, most innovative and unusual parties of the spring season. (Tom Brokaw, hip? Just wait...)

This year, the Institute of Contemporary Art is exploring and celebrating current trends in popular fashion and sexuality with their most recent exhibition, "Currents 93: Dress Codes." Accompanying this exhibit is the ICA's annual spring benefit, "Suit Your Self," which will take place at the World Trade Center on the evening of May 15.

Highlighting the evening's festivities will be a celebrity auction. The auction will feature a shirt of Leonard Nimoy's, a jogging suit of "Psycho" Janet Leigh, a pair of reincarnated plaid pants from the closet of Shirley MacLaine, plus several other intriguing personal items from those aforementioned celebrities. (No, Burt Reynolds did not donate his toupee.)

There will also be music, dancing, and a fashion show featuring 1994 collections by several Boston designers, with clothes that emphasize freedom of dress and expression. Japanese artist Yasumasa Morimura has also created a limited-edition print specifically for the benefit.

All proceeds from "Suit Your Self" will go directly toward funding future exhibitions at the ICA, so come out and express yourself, or dress in drag if you are so inclined – it's for a good cause. ❑

For tickets and information contact the ICA at 266-5152.

THE COMPANY OF ANGELS

Promise Unfulfilled

BY NANCY LEONARD

Alan Brody's "The Company of Angels" seemed a highly promising work during its staged reading, last spring at Newton's New Rep Theatre. It was full of energy and hope, though a certain stiff awkwardness prevailed, with the actors carrying their scripts and entering the action from chairs pushed back against another play's set. Relying on positive audience response, director Larry Lane decided to stage the world premiere in the New Rep's next season.

But the negative qualities, which seemed to come from the embryonic format, unfortunately linger in the full-scale mounting, and undermine the effort. What should be an emotionally compelling piece, with warm and complex characters fighting against despair, is often a preachy collection of attitudes.

The play was inspired by the true story of Rita Karpinowicz. As a young actress in Poland in 1946, she founded a theater company with her husband, to bring Yiddish language productions to displaced survivors in Polish and German resettlement camps. Initially, they played on makeshift stages with an improvised work, then settled into a formal theater in Munich, performing a wide-ranging repertoire. When the camps were disbanded, the company broke up, and the couple came to the United States.

The play's action tracks these events, from the spring of 1946 to the summer of 1949. Rochel Kremer, an actress trained in Moscow, and her friend Leib Arnovsky, a director, find themselves in Poland after the war.

All sorts of people have come looking for others, and the walls of the Jewish Committee in Lodz are filled with life and death information. Mordecai Solomon, a singer/actor who spent four years with the partisans, wants to start a theater so that the people in the camps can "hear our language" and live again. Two hoofers from Budapest, and their musical director, sign on right away. A renowned actress freed from a concentration camp and her young companion join their rehearsals.

Amidst differing opinions about the desirability of the enterprise and the nature of the work to be presented, the company devises a look at "Yesterday and Today." It draws on the musicalized stories of Sholom Aleichem, and confronts the continuing pogroms in Poland as well as the British quotas preventing emigration to Palestine. Backstage, there's blossoming romance, personal renewal, some political intrigue involving the rescue of children, and metaphysical debate in the face of the Holocaust.

The play is constructed with competent theatricality from many short scenes, but it's marred by unexplained shadows and ambiguity, obvious playwrighting devices, and stylized distancing. Leib's early authoritarianism, for example, remains a puzzle, as do some aspects of the freed actress' development and one man's repeated mention of an imagined spectator. The characters, not fully personified, often say and do things simply to suit their creator's convenience. Two backstage visitors serve as opposing voices in the human debate: is the troupe doing good, or only spreading false hopes? When the author tries to counter the latter view with another tale of survival, the logical thread is lost in a murky tangle.

Larry Lane's conscientious direction fails to gloss over these flaws, and his actors aren't strong enough to do it on their own. What should be riveting, or at least moving ("a shipment" that "went down," the partisan's rallying cry, closing the first act; the anthem marking the establishment of Israel) fails to be either in this production. Some kind of inflexibility keeps the characterizations at a distance, not serving dramatic ends.

Steven Capone's cement-walled set – perhaps intended as a metaphor of desolation – easily accommodates the action, but without much sense of particular locales, atmosphere or passing time. A few props, rudimentary backdrops, and a piano materialize for various scenes. The musical segments try to lift the proceedings into other realms of entertainment. Donna May's costumes convey the company's improving fortunes. Eric Levenson's lighting facilitates the "on-stage" action and shades scenic snippets, amplifying the main event.

Pamela Shafer plays Rochel with stylized reserve and didactic enthusiasm. Her laudable commitment should be warmer. John Moser's determined Mordecai needs more strength for real credibility. Barry Jay Abramowitz is good as the troubled Leib, once he gets into the fray. As the actress/survivor, Josefina Bosch needs to vary the pain. Chandra Pieragostini is alright as her aspiring companion and Paul Wagner and George Drance are fine as the fun-loving hoofers. Charles Geyer's musical director is nicely understated while Scott Severance and Kat Stoutenboroguh play diverse roles.

The New Rep hasn't realized the promise in Alan Brody's play. The story should be compelling and uplifting, but here it's much less than angelic. ❑

BENEFIT TO HONOR BOSTON'S BEST EATS

BY MAGGIE JAMESON

Where can you sample a wide variety of fine foods from over 30 of Greater Boston's best restaurants, enjoy two-stepping country music and an awards presentation by local celebrities—all for a $10 ticket which benefits one of the most successful free meals programs in Boston?

Discover the fun, the food and the music at the Fifth Annual "People's Choice Awards" for Restaurants, proudly sponsored by the Greater Boston Restaurant Guide, WCLB-FM 105.7 and The Improper Bostonian.

The benefit awards event will feature the first public announcement of 35 "People's Choice Awards" to restaurants in many categories, presented by Boston celebrities and restaurant critics. Awards are based on results of ballots cast by the dining public through the Greater Boston Restaurant Guide. Categories include "Best Ambiance," "Best Brunch," "Best Caterer," Best Romantic," and "Best Kept Secret." Participating restaurants include Calamari Fisheries/Daily Catch, Mamma Maria, Bob the Chef and the Small Planet Bar & Grill.

The Church of All Nations, which provides the inter-denominational, interracial free meals programs, "Saturday's Bread" and "Sunday's Bread,"is the beneficiary of the event. These programs provide free meals on weekends and have welcomed over 162,000 guests with meals prepared and served by over 1,000 volunteers. Sponsoring organizations include Catholic Jewish, Protestant, Sufi and other churches, as well as groups from M.I.T., Boston University, Harvard, Brandeis, Tufts, New England School of Law and others.

The benefit awards event takes place on Tuesday, May 25, 1993, from 7 p.m. - 10 p.m. at "Silverado at the Roxy," 279 Tremont Street in Boston, across from the Wang Center. All proceeds from ticket sales benefit the "Saturday's Bread" and "Sunday's Bread" free meals program at the Church of All Nations in Boston, now celebrating its 10th anniversary. The event is open to the public. Tickets are $10 per person and can be purchased at the door, or in advance by calling the "People's Choice" at (617) 566-5216. ❑

CELEBERITY GUEST DINING REVIEW

Cornucopia On the Wharf; Bountiful and By the Sea

BY FRANK AVRUCH

Cornucopia recently hopped across town from its old home on West Street to the waterfront. Now in the location of the former Cherrystones, the restaurant has not only greatly expanded its space, but has also added more seafood entrees, in honor of the new waterfront digs. The kitchen is working well under chef Stuart Cameron's direction, and the adventurous culinary flair is still there. On the evening of my visit, I asked another couple to join me, so there would be a wider sampling of the items on the menu. Here are some of my favorites.

For starters, the Caesar salad was thoroughly tasty and enjoyable, with an exotic flavor. It came with a choice of smoked trout, oysters or the usual anchovies. The grilled portobello mushroom carpaccio was another hit. The large and meaty mushrooms were sliced paper thin, sprinkled with truffle oil and parmesan, and served with scallion accompaniment.

Jumbo is the only word to describe the tender gulf shrimp in our next appetizer, the shrimp cocktail. The chef's culinary flair was once again evident in the cocktail's four creative condiments, which included a tangy corn relish (from fresh steamed corn), a creamy black bean sauce, a hot and spicy cocktail sauce, and, to balance it all, a dollop of sour cream. Certainly not the usual cocktail companion.

The menu has been expanded, so (in honor of the new waterfront location) our party opted for seafood entrees. We ordered a succulent grilled lobster, laced with Greek and Spanish olive oil, that came with a special sauce of lemon, shellfish stock and fennel. Next was a fresh swordfish, grilled with basil and leek, which was accompanied by a side dish of creamy garlic mashed potatoes. It was melt-in-your-mouth good! Our third choice, the salmon, was perfectly seared and served with risotto croquettes coated with corn bread. The desserts were tempting but our party was slowing down. However, we did manage to find room for a tempting créme brulée, topped by a tower of spun sugar. It disappeared too quickly. To conclude our dining adventure, we had coffee that came with homemade biscotti and a white chocolate cornucopia. My cup runneth over.

Kudos to our waiter, Bob, who added immeasurably to the evening. His description and knowledge of the menu was exemplary and his service, out--standing. Congratulations to Cornucopia on the Wharf...may the wind always be at their back. ❑

CHEF OF THE MONTH

Enzo Raggiana of Enzo's

BY MARGE CHRYSSOSTOMIDIS AND PETER MCNAMARA

Enzo Raggiani was born in Switzerland and grew up in the northern part of Italy. Even as a child, he loved good food and helping in the kitchen, so when he reached the age of 19, he enrolled in the celebrated San Pellegrino Culinary School. There, he underwent their grueling six-year course, leading to a diploma that entitles the holder to open a restaurant in Switzerland (no mean feat). During the course of these studies, students were given the opportunity to travel all around Italy and Switzerland, both cooking and tasting the local food, which naturally provided Enzo with an excellent background in the regional foods of Italy.

For five years, Enzo owned a restaurant/night club/snack bar in Lugano. Then, in 1985, his American wife persuaded him to move to Boston. Here, after trying and enjoying many local restaurants, he decided to open his own business. In November of 1986, Papillon Ristorante, an international gourmet shop with a dining room, came into being in Marion, Massachusetts. Business was good, though seasonal, and when his lease was due to expire, Enzo's out-of-town customers persuaded him to move to Brookline, where he opened Enzo's in August of 1991. Now, his former customers miss him so much, they travel from Marion especially to eat at his new restaurant!

At Enzo's, you will find a menu that changes seasonally. In summer, he likes to grow his own herbs for cooking and this is reflected in the dishes served. A popular item on the menu at the moment is linguini al cartoccio, in which seafood is literally cooked in a bag. In winter, Enzo plans to put quail and rabbit on the menu, together with some really hearty fare.

Many traditional Italian dishes can be found on the menu, but Enzo stresses that it is not necessary for diners to stick to what is listed there, as he will cook anything from any region on request (even without notice, provided he has the ingredients on hand). Should you want anything really unusual or time-consuming to make, simply call in a description ahead of time and he will cook it for you. Similarly, if you have dietary restrictions, Enzo can accommodate your needs. One of Enzo's specialties is his grandmother's recipe for tiramisu. You will never find anything like it elsewhere, he says.

Enzo's Ristorante is located at 329 Harvard Ave., Brookline, 227-1288 ❑

APPETEASERS

BY PETER MCNAMARA AND R.E. BRUNSON

GRILL OUT

The West Street Grill will be opening by the end of May, in Cornucopia's old location on 15 West Street. Charlie Robertson, formerly of the Blue Room and Hamersly's, is the general manager and Neilse Clarke, a partner in Amsterdam's, is one of the owners. Bar space will be tripled to include the whole first floor, while the second floor will be opened up to seat 100. Despite all these changes, the fireplace will be saved. Tom Schnapp is the main chef, and the menu is "urban provincial" (downtown comfort food), with entrees in the $12-13 range. There is also good news for wine lovers – wine prices will not be tripled. We expect great success with Charlie in charge.

BLOWN AWAY

Michael Kornick, executive chef at Aujourd'hui, will soon be leaving Boston to head back to the windy city. Michael, a wonderful chef, was always accessible and willing to share not only his knowledge, but his time. He could always be found serving up his creations at local benefits. We will greatly miss both Michael and his delicious gorgonzola crackers with apricot preserves.

Chef Michael Kornick will be replaced by Chef Jamie Mammano, the executive chef from the Four Seasons in Chicago. We welcome Jamie to the true windy city, and wish him well.

NEWS FROM THE EAST

East Coast Grill will present "Eat with Your Hands" night on Monday, June 7. No utensils will be in sight for this special hands-on evening, featuring peel-and-eat shrimp, steamers, sausage tortilla wraps, Memphis-style ribs, and soft shell crabs. For more information call 491-6568.

Andy Husbands of the East Coast Grill and Anna Kovel of The Blue Room have started an organization called B.U.R.N. (Boston's Unusual Restaurant Network) for aspiring chefs. B.U.R.N. attends to participate in community events, and offer networking and educational activities for its members. Call Andy at 738-4728 for membership info.

In The Blue Room, Chris Schlesinger has taken over the kitchen. Chris and crew have developed a new menu with an emphasis on exotic grilled flavors in a more casual format. The Blue Room; 494-9034.

NU NOUVELLE

With construction well under way, a number of eateries are looking into locations at the new Prudential Center. The Ground Round will be back – this time as a sports bar. Rebecca's Cafe will be joining the lineup along with the Sweet Factory, Jack's Last Resort, and the California Pizza Kitchen. Legal Seafoods, contrary to rumor, is not going into the Top of the Hub, but into a location over the present Star Market. However, a certain night club owner from the Lansdowne Street area is taking a hard look at this faded Boston institution, atop the Pru tower.

WE ALL SCREAM

The season for frozen delight is upon us, and Ice Cream Works has come up with a great way to make it decadent and guilt-free. They call it Perfect 10; "ice cream kick without the calories." Zingy flavors, creamy texture, only 10 calories per oz., no sugar and no fat. Yay! Call 969-6256

JUICY DETAILS

The owners of Marais have found a location for a second restaurant!!! The location cannot yet be disclosed, but ply us with drinks and who knows? A third restaurant is on the drawing board. Adios, El Torito (Quincy Market), hello, Planet Hollywood. Chef Diane Unger has left the Union Club to be the executive chef for the Sherborn Inn. The new chef is at the Union Club is Chris McCook,, who comes from the Tatnuk Country Club in Worcester. Red, Hot & Blue has put plans for their new Boston Restaurant on hold.

MORE JUICY DETAILS

Stan Frankenthaler, who recently left The Blue Room, may have found the restaurant of his dreams in a neighborhood setting. Enzo Raggiana and wife Joann, of Enzo's in Brookline, recently added a beautiful 8 lb. girl to their family; her name is Isabella. Owner David Sum is about to open a new Korean restaurant in Union Square in Cambridge. The Old Spaghetti Factory chain will soon open a new restaurant on Pittsburgh Street. It will be interesting to see how the family spaghetti house fares in a urban setting. Personally, we don't think the North End has much to worry about. Rumor has it that Boston Beer Works is looking at a location on Boylston Street.

SAVE THIS DATE

Ever wanted to meet the faces behind the names? Well, your chance arrives on Tuesday, May 25, from 7-10 p.m. when the Greater Boston Restaurant Guide sponsors the People's Choice Awards to benefit the Church of All Nations free meals programs. The awards will be presented to area restaurants by local personalities, including staff from The Improper Bostonian – including yours truly. The event costs $10 a person, and takes place at Silverado at the Roxy, 279 Tremont Street. It will feature entertainment and samplings of special dishes from over 30 area restaurants. So pull on those cowboy boots and we'll see you there. For information, call 787-2637. ❑

Through The Wine Glass

Chardonnay: The Good, The Bad and The Ugly

BY SANDY BLOCK, MW

Rich and spicy, mouthwateringly fresh, clean, neutral, dry as air, crispy, fleshy, tooty-fruity, roasty-toasty or medium rare: does picking chardonnay give you the shivers? How does anyone ever know which one is which?

The good news: it's not as random as it might appear. And so, to make it clear, here is your label decoder, or, what I humbly submit as "The Once and Forever Definitive Guide to Chardonnay Flavor and Aroma."

Qualities of Chardonnay

Grape variety is the most important determinant of the way a wine tastes. So why does the thirsty world crave chardonnay, chardonnay and more chardonnay? Because the grape shows memorable flavor? To the contrary, like a glamorous politician who says anything to get ahead, chardonnay lacks intrinsic character; its chameleon personality is charming, inoffensive and easily molded to fit popular tastes.

What explains its mass appeal, then? Lacking flavor definition of its own, chardonnay seduces consumers by providing a great natural backdrop for oak-barrel seasoning. Top quality French cooperage can especially enrich wine aroma and texture. If the fruit is sufficiently intense, barrel fermentation and aging lend an undeniable polish. Layers of creamy, lush vanilla and almond flavors result. So do substantial prices.

Most chardonnay grapes see little or no contact with wood, though, because barrel treatment would overpower them. Suited to commercial production on a larger scale, these simpler, fruitier wines dominate many by-the-glass features and retail shelves. In general, they are smoothly textured and well proportioned with the suggestions of soft apple and melon flavors.

Production methods aside, wine flavor directly reflects grape quality. "Great wine," we are told, "can only come from great fruit." In other words, chardonnay harvested at three tons per acre, rather than ten, will produce wine with less dilution of aroma and flavor.

Warmer climates produce fuller wines, with riper, more developed fruit flavors; cooler climate grapes can taste green, display aggressive acidity and make steelier chardonnays, with a pronounced edge. Soils vary worldwide, but the presence of limestone indisputably contributes the mineral qualities that chardonnay enthusiasts prize.

Types of Chardonnay

Northern Italy: Simple, direct, pale colored, generally un-oaked, with vaguely juicy fruit and a touch of spritz (CO_2) for vitality.

Australia: Once the overblown buttery beast of the species, lately a touch subtler. Still high alcohol (hot climate), with orange marmalade notes and often, except at high prices, a harsh citrussy tang.

Chablis: Classically cool, crisp and green-leaf flavored; the soil is right, except lately price is a joke and quality the punch line.

Cote de Beaune: The real stuff. Crisp but unctuous, luscious and tart, butterscotch and lemon; it can't hardly get better. But buyer beware: know your producers. If you let a showy village name (Chassagne, Puligny, Meursault) lead you, you might get your pocket picked. Then again, you might just never go back.

Macon: The people's choice. Ripe, glossy and easy. Rarely oaked, but often smoked.

California: No free lunch. You get what you pay for. Under $10 and there's not much finesse or flavor...or authentic chardonnay (only 75% by law). A bit hot and blowsy, but look for sub-appellations: Carneros (lemony, taut), Central Coast (sweet fruit and spice), Sonoma (classy, subdued).

Pacific Northwest: Erratic. Sometimes fine, often bizarrely woody and dull.

East Coast: The new contender for the middleweight crown; can be stringy and mean, or graceful and clean.

New Zealand: The climate's cold, the wine is bold. Explosive and thrilling; what a punch! Pay for the best.

Eastern Europe, South America: Cheap, it's true, but save your money and invest wisely...in a beer.

The Future

Armed with this info, you can now pick your "chard" with the best of them. The bad news? The C-grape is on the way out. Why? It's uncool. It's been around too long. Take the smart money, and go for the underdog. That's right, chuck this guide and when you're thinking white, repeat after me: Pee-no Gree. ❑

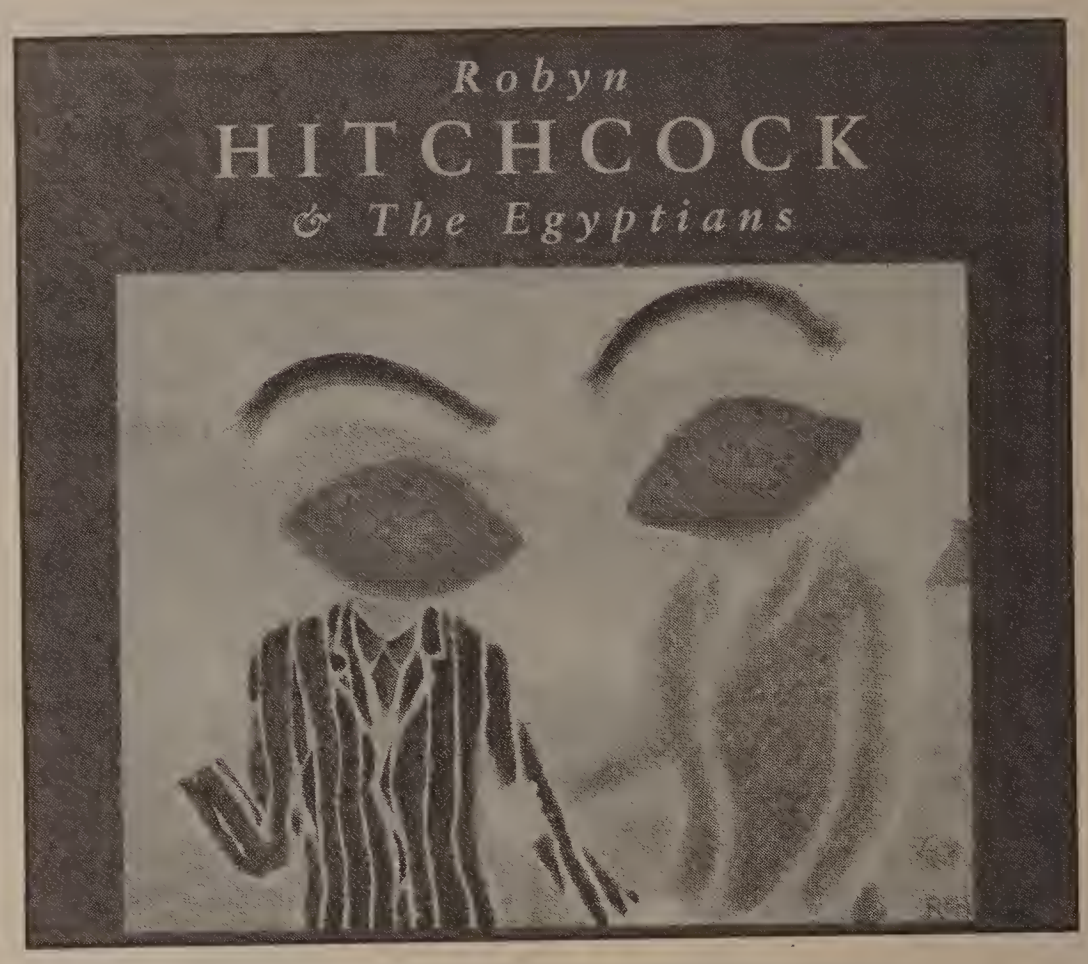
No Trebel In Paradise



Showing Another Side

BY SANDER WOLF

Robyn Hitchcock, the British thick-tongued alternative cult hero, has just recently turned forty, and although he takes it lightly, (unhappily but matter-of-factly remarking that he prefers it to "being dead"), he realizes that it's time for some sort of change. Staying a few years older than his regular audience, coping with the recent death of his father, and suffering through the prerequisite mid-life crisis has begun to take its toll.

But instead of buying a fancy new car ("If I did that I'd just have to find some other way of getting exercise," he sarcastically muses) or leaving his wife for an adoring seventeen-year-old fan, Hitchcock has instead begun to channel his excess restless energies into writing and reciting his own narrative stories, painting with oils, and, along with his band, The Egyptians, writing some of the best songs of his career.

The newest album from the trio of Hitchcock, bassist/keyboardist Andy Metcalfe, and drummer Morris Windsor features quirky gems like "Driving Aloud (Radio Storm)," "The Yip Song," and an innuendo-filled experiment titled "Wafflehead." Originally slated as Red Lemon Days, after an anagram of "yonder damsel" painstakingly discovered by Metcalfe, the album title was later changed to Respect, partly because, Hitchcock says, "Respect is something everybody wants." The album cover, an original painting by Hitchcock of two red-lemon headed people whose heads form part of a larger face, remains. Also included with the album, right next to the Lyrics, is a short story about a confused and symbolic moose written by Hitchcock.

It's obvious that Hitchcock has been keeping himself busy, but at the root of all his personal chaos is still his music. "I'm going to [continue to] do the spoken word performances, but I don't know if I'll release them or not," he says. "There are two projects going on at this moment; one is to just do instrumentals and the other is to just do words. But obviously no record company would want to release something with just instrumentals on it, so what we'll probably stick to doing our stories over instrumentals," Hitchcock tries to explain, adding that a third plan involves staging an art exhibition next year.

The description of his songs is accurate since some do form some sort of narrative story. "When I Was Dead," one of the more memorable tunes from Respect, is a good example when Hitchcock intones, "When I was dead somebody took my hand/I couldn't see his face I took his hand/And the Devil asked me to supper/He said 'Careful with the spoons!'/And God said, 'Oh, ignore him! I've got all your albums'/I said, 'Yes, but who's got all the tunes?"

But most of the songs on Respect tend to be more introspective and analytical, or comical like the album's first single, "Driving Aloud (Radio Storm)," where Hitchcock sings in time with a jerking acoustic beat, "And your diagram was nervous when I saw you on TV/You're so vulnerable, honey, now you're fatter than me/I've got a Harrison Ford poster rolled up in my desk/I'd sign it for you, dude, if you'd only request."

Maybe as Hitchcock's career continues in its upwards spiral, he'll finally calm down, or at least make the decision to stick to one creative outlet. But hopefully, he won't. ❑

Robyn Hitchcock performs at the Berklee Performance Center on May 18.

Local Music Spotlight

Walk That Walk

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

Of all the great musical scenes in Boston, perhaps none has the depth of local blues. Performers like Shirley Lewis, Luther Johnson and 100 Proof pack Harpers Ferry and The House of Blues on a nightly basis. And the latest band to make their mark are a mean five piece known as Walk That Walk.

Performing both covers and originals, the band features singer and harp player Tim Gartland, whose voice is textured and powerful. Gartland is complemented by slide guitarist Chuck DeSnyder; combined, they achieve a raucous, traditional sound rooted in the music of Willie Dixon and Muddy Waters. Going well beyond the same old three chords is keyboardist Ted Armstrong, who puts the band a step above your average club act. His fills are well-placed and rich, while his solos are show-stoppers, drawing cheers every time. ❑

Catch Walk That Walk at The House of Blues on June 16 and at Ed Burke's on June 26 and at The Spring Swing benefit on May 22nd.

Great Woods

Hot Summer Schedule

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

Great Woods in Mansfield has announced a schedule filled with great shows this summer. The month of June has: Sting on June 4, Glen Frey and Joe Walsh on June 6, Poison and LSD on June 12, Lyle Lovett on June 17, Lynyrd Skynryd on June 18, Steve Miller on June 24 and THE THE on June 26.

July has 10,000 Maniacs on July 7, The Reggae Sunsplash on July 8, Van Halen on July 9 & 10, the Spin Doctors & Soul Asylum on July 13, Whitney Houston on July 14 & 15, Barry Manilow on July 16. The Moody Blues hit July 18, Phish on July 24, Yanni on July 25, Duran Duran on July 26, Tina Turner on July 29 and Dwight Yokam, July 31.

August finds the Allman Brothers jamming on the first, with UB40 on Aug. 2. Extreme opens up for Bon Jovi on Aug. 3 and Def Leppard performs on Aug. 6. Three great bluesmen, B.B King, Eric Johnson, and Buddy Guy jam Aug. 8, while Clint Black and Wynonna Judd play Aug. 19. Steely Dan plays Aug. 20, the Beach Boys on Aug. 24, classic rockers Jethro Tull and opening act Procul Harum, on Aug. 28 and the Big Gig, on Aug. 29.

Shows continue into September (such as Sade, Sept, 1) and the biggest party of the year is always held by thousands of parrotheads as Jimmy Buffett plays, Sept. 2-4. More shows are expected to be announced, including Aerosmith. All shows listed above are available through Ticketmaster, and prices range from $20 to $30 dollars depending on the show and the seats. ❑

BOB GELDOF
THE HAPPY CLUB
POLYDOR RECORDS

After a decade-and-a-half in the music world, Bob Geldof is still best known in the U.S. for trying to heal the world's maladies with a Band-Aid (and a Live-Aid, too). And while he certainly deserves credit for his efforts, one wonders whether his musical career has suffered because of it. People are more likely to see him as Joe Save-The-World than as a viable artist; he tends to be more popular in Europe and his native Ireland. But he is an accomplished singer/songwriter, and has hit the charts with various tunes throughout the years, starting with the Boomtown Rats from 1977-85 and continuing since as a sololst.

Musically, The Happy Club is a hybrid of Bob Dylan and Elvis Costello: quirky folk-pop with a strong Irish character. The result is very listenable, although many will probably find his meanderings pretentious (though not quite to Sting-like proportions). He's also got a penchant for goofy song titles, like "The Song of the Emergent Nationalist" and "Attitude Chicken." The latter provides the most interesting line of the album: "...the politically correct are the Nazis of our time." Could Geldof be trying to shake his Dudley Do-Right stigma? Geldof may have a little trouble selling his brand of folk-pop. He sounds a little limp compared to modern alternative acts. Pearl Jam and the Chili Peppers make 'Geldof' seem more like 'Gelded.'

ROBERT E. HUGHES

IRON MAIDEN
A REAL LIVE ONE
CAPITOL RECORDS

Iron Maiden, for the uninitiated, was a product of a late-70's explosion of British heavy metal, which also spawned the likes of Judas Priest. Surprisingly, both Iron Maiden and Judas Priest have lost their vocalists within the past few weeks; Maiden's Bruce Dickinson and Priest's Rob Halford have chosen to pursue various solo careers. So this collection of live Maiden tunes, recorded at various dates throughout Europe, will be the last upon which Maiden fans will get to hear Dickinson. The choice of songs highlight their last two albums, Seventh Son of a Seventh Son (a genuinely underappreciated album) and Fear of the Dark. It's not bad, but any true Maiden-head knows that their best work is behind them. In the Heavy Metal History Book, Maiden could get a whole chapter to themselves based on the strength of a decade of classics like "Run to the Hills" and "Number of the Beast."

Dickinson is actually Maiden's second vocalist (Paul DiAnno getting the boot after two great albums), so Maiden might have a slightly easier time replacing him than poor Judas Priest (Rob Halford is utterly irreplaceable). To hear Maiden's best work, grab a copy of Live After Death. Iron Maiden got their name from a medieval torture rack, but can they really stretch out their own careers for much longer?

ROBERT E. HUGHES

LIVING COLOUR STAIN

Living Colour specializes in blurring lines. They mix the driving rage of heavy metal with the intensity of hard core. They are proud of their race without letting it dominate their music. And they maintain their integrity while still getting radio airplay. The best songs on Stain, the band's third LP, feature guitarist Vernon Reid crunching chords over one of rock's tightest rhythm sections. Songs like "Leave It Alone" and "Go Away" express anger and stay with the listener.

Still, while the band deserves credit for being ambitious, some of the concepts are less successful. Guest vocalist Andrew Fairley can't save "Hemp" from being a sonic mess, and "Nothingness" shows that boring dance beats aren't the band's strong point. Still, "Bi" and "Never Satisfied" are loud rock with enough twists to put them well above a slew of less creative bands.

HINDEMITH: CONCERT MUSIC FOR STINGS AND BASS
SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY LONDON RECORDS

Paul Hindemith's music is often criticized as being on the academic side; much of it is, but there are a half-dozen or so of his works that exhibit more than skillful craftsmanship, and rightly remain in the orchestral repertory. Of those works, Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes by Weber and Mathis der Maler are the most popular and afford the best introduction to Hindemith. Both are contained on an earlier London release by Blomstedt and San Francisco. Those familiar with them will certainly recognize Hindemith's unmistakable signature in the three works comprising this program. Though Hindemith can not be counted among the trailblazers of the 20th century, his music, at its best, merits more than casual acquaintance. San Francisco is yet another orchestra that renders the term "Big Five" obsolete, due in no small part to Blomstedt's tenure here.

About Last Night...

Talkin 'Bout Our Generation (X)

BY LAUREN DARE, AKA THE LAST CALL LADY

Once, not so very long ago, we had identifiable generations. The "Lost Generation," for instance, out wandering around somewhere, or the "Beat Generation," taking to the road with Jack Kerouac. The "Me Generation" stole everything they could from the other generations so they could drive around in BMW's and buy summer houses in the South of France, and the "Pepsi Generation" became crazed from sugar and caffeine consumption, and watching too much MTV.

Now we have "Generation X," which nobody seems to be able to demographically pinpoint, but we know they're out there. In fact, it's possible that I just might be one of them. This possibility raises several pressing questions in my little blonde head. What does it mean to be a member of this generation? What are the qualifying characteristics of a Generation Xer? Don't I/we rate a little more descriptive cognomen than "X?" How long should I wait before I get my roots done? What the hell does "cognomen" mean? Deep thoughts, indeed, n'est-ce pas?

GENERATION X

1270 Boylston Street

Boston

424-7747

Well, the club called Quest at 1270 Boylston Street (yes, the 1270, which is still an "alternative" club on other nights,) seems to think that they have found the answers to these questions, (they told me I need to get my roots done As Soon As Possible) and they'll be happy to share them with you. That is, if you meet the Gen X criteria for Thursdays nights, when Quest hosts "Generation X: A Nightclub for an Accelerated Culture."

The criteria for getting into the club are clearly stated in the club's fliers: "If you are not 23/have no invitation/ do not know anyone at the club, you don't get in." Although I'm not sold on the idea that actually being a member of Generation X (the generation) is really conditional upon knowing somebody in Generation X (the club), I am kind of hip to the idea of a door policy, being the snob that I am.

However, if, in the past month, you've been to any club owned by Pat Lyons, you've probably been offered a membership at Gen X, since every club has to walk that line between exclusivity and paying the rent. This policy may be a little overly democratic for the drop-dead snob, but at least it guarantees a more interesting and less homogeneous mix of people in the club, and Quest is certainly big enough to handle the crowd. There are four floors to the club, the "cool" Water Floor, the Earth Floor, where you can groove, the Fire Floor, where you can – you got it – burn, and the roof deck, where you can toss your drinks over the balcony onto the people waiting in line below (but be sneaky while you do this, as it's not very popular with the management).

If you're not sure whether or not you belong in Generation X, the club provides a glossary of "Generation X Speak," which helpfully includes the terms "mid-twenties breakdown: a period of mental collapse occurring in one's twenties, often caused by an inability to function outside school or structured environment," and "Dorian Graying: the unwillingness to gracefully allow one's body to show signs of aging," among others. If any of these terms strike a familiar cord somewhere in your subconscious, or if you feel that your life definitely does have meaning, but you're just not sure what it is yet, rush out and get your membership NOW.

Just kidding. One thing that a Gen Xer never feels is the imperative to do a specific thing immediately. It's, like, way too much pressure, man. It's not that we're really avoiding anything in particular, it's just that it's so much more fun to go out and par-tay it up now. We'll worry about what follows later, in our thirties...maybe.

But for now, what the X Generation wants is to go hang out in the Angst Is Us "Batcave," listening to Goth music, or do the Bus Stop on the Studio 54 Floor with other Xers who can relate to our quasi-existential dilemmas, such as what are we going to drink tonight, and who are we going to wake up next to tomorrow morning, and will it ruin my reputation? My immediate answers to these are: 1) anything alcoholic, 2) the doorguy who was wearing a vest with nothing underneath and had a stomach I could wash my lingerie on, and 3) who cares?

By 1 a.m. on Gen X's opening night, I was reeling to a techno beat that would make Tipper Gore drop her drawers, and thinking that it wasn't so bad to not have a real life, just a lifestyle, and thanking God from the bottom of my drunken, sweaty, and lecherous soul that I still have a few years left in the X Generation. ❑

BARS & CLUBS

Bar & Club Listings are a service for our advertisers. To have your Bar or Club listed, in this section, call our advertising department at 232-3507.

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

•ARBUCKLES 782-9508, 1249 Comm. Ave, Brighton. Situated between BU and BC, Arbuckles attracts an even mix of students from both schools and anyone else in search of good food and drink at a good price. 20 oz. drafts for $2!!! The dress is always casual, but the atmosphere ranges from mellow and relaxing to noisy and boisterous.

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxed jazz club situated a stones throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an "I love jazz attitude" on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose na.m.e is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9664, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and a guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis. Live entertainment nightly from Rock to Reggae and Blues. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years, The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code.

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•CACTUS CLUB 236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos. Join us in the evening and experience our firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit julce). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can try a Platinum margarita with Sauza Hornitos, triple sec, fresh lemonade and fresh lime juice. Full menu available at bar.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Nite 9:30 to 1:00. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky, but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

•LENOX PUB & GRILLE 536-5300, 710 Boylston St., Bos. Enjoy casual dining and an extensive array of imported and domestic beers in an authentic British pub. No cover. Neat dress. Sun. brunch 11:30a.m.-2:30p.m..

•LILY'S 720-5580, 101 S. Market Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. The tourists have found a good deal at this cafe/piano bar where one can sample quality cheap eats and listen to piano Fri.-Sat. nights. No cover or dress code.

•THE LITTLEST BAR 523-9766, 47 Province St., Boston. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. As its name implies, The Littlest Bar is quite little., in fact, the place only seats 17 people. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30a.m.-12a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

•MONDAY'S PIANO BAR 277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline. . Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

•MARKETPLACE CAFE 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Boston. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30p.m.. "Street Magic" acapella every Wednesday at at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

•NIGHTSTAGE 497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

•O'LEARY'S 734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

•PARADISE ROCK CLUB 254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

•PROVINCE STREET PUB 227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week til' 2a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2a.m.. Appetizers served until 1a.m..

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos. An Irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall. Entertainment alternates between traditional Irish music and DJ dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hardcore alternative crowd - lots of black clothes and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

•RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB 876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryles. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

•SCULLERS LOUNGE 783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

•T'S PUB 254-0807, 973 Comm. Ave., Boston. Great food, lively atmosphere and there's always something going on inside. Younger bar-hoppers beware: Only valid IDs accepted (they're really tough!). Lunches and dinners are delicious and reasonably priced. College and thirtysomething crowd. Never a cover but always a good time.

•THE BARMUDA TRIANGLE 437-1011, 200 Brookline Avenue, Boston. Located just outside of Kenmore Square, The Triangle features live music seven nights a week. Catch Boston's best Jazz early in the week, and kick up your heels to Latin, R&B, Reggae and Rock through the weekends. Full bar. Reasonable entertainment charge after 9:30. Weekly giveaways include free passes, round trip tickets to Bermuda, T-shirts, parties and more!

•WARREN TAVERN 241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Boston. A funky little bar whose clientiele includes young professionals & athletes. Reputedly having some of the most beautiful women in Boston.The bar now attracts manly athletes. Stars don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — MAY 12-25, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)
A mercurial fortnight...provocative, yet productive; somewhat dangerous and depressing too, but that may pass soon after we slip into Gemini next Thursday. The pace of life seems quicker because Mercury has been racing through Taurus in two short weeks, instead of a steady three or a retrogressed six. After rewarding recent acts of imagination and independence with a few choice words, such as a rave review or a hard to get interview, on Thursday and Friday Mercury tests our ability to absorb any more hype about rebuilding L.A., saving/bombing Bosnia or reconstructing a future from burnt out, broken bits of the past before moving on to Gemini late Monday night. To complete the reality check, the Taurus sun opposes Pluto, lord of the underworld, on Friday, conjuncts media-driven Mercury Saturday and squares authoritarian Saturn next Thursday. That's the day Saturn moves out of Aquarius into Pisces for three weeks before turning retrograde and heading back. Folks born on any cusp get a sense of what'll happen while Saturn, the stern taskmaster, stomps through spiritual, sacrificial Pisces from 2/94 through 3/96. Jihad, anyone? The rest of us feel strange due to the impending solar eclipse, the Gemini new moon on the 21st, and foolishly lucky when the sun favors expansive Jupiter on the 25th.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)
Make the deal, already. Mercury in your money house is on such friendly terms with Uranus (science) and Neptune (art) in your mid heaven, that it would be a waste of wordpower and imaginative thinking to let negotiations go on much longer. However Mercury is less friendly to your broker, banker and peers, but if you can keep this week's challenges separate from last week's high test scores, you'll make progress. It's a fine line between revealing secrets and uncovering information that the sure footed ram is walking so gingerly.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)
Once again, the Taurus sun opposes pushy Pluto in your marriage house, the planet that's dying to get rid of what no longer sustains the partnership. This cosmic garage sale has been going on since 1984, when Pluto first entered Scorpio, your cosmic "other." Keep the parts that function, throw out the rest or bury your feelings until you can safely deal with them? The sun also squares Saturn in your mid heaven, so you'll have an extra family obligation or more clout on the job (the better to clobber your boss?).

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)
Tricks of the trade are exposed, health info revealed and escape routes explored. You're attracting an array of such intelligent opinion and advice that you should do something with it immediately. While your Mercury ruler joins with the sun, you can also pull in a host of spiritual insights. What to do with such smarts? Put out a newsletter, tell a friend, buy into a fund. Just don't sit on what you learn and wait for a better, the mythical "more convenient" time to make a move. How does the 25th, when the Gemini sun favors lucky Jupiter, sound?

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)
Friends, past lovers, the kids and your mate line up in funny formations this week; sometimes running interference, but getting in your way once or twice when it comes to money and fun. Watch what you gamble on, how intensely you play. A buddy's advice can lead to a major investment, one you'll fret over when the sun squares sobering Saturn and you sense that a new moon, a new agenda is just around the corner. Take your time, be circumspect but don't let the weight of deciding drag you down.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)
Lions born close to the Virgo border are the main targets for the tensions that arise when your sun ruler opposes Pluto this weekend. Isn't there something that should be recycled, such as your relationship with a parent or person from your past, or a garage that can turn into a studio? Guilt or ambient anxiety could overtake you when the sun and Saturn are in a testy square just before the solar eclipse next Friday, but you're treated to one of life's luxuries when the sun finally favors lucky Jupiter in your money house on the 25th.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)
Impressively clever and the center of attention too. While your Mercury ruler makes contact with almost every heavenly body, you process information and invitations with amazing efficiency. Just concentrate on what you want to happen and, except for romance (your lovelife plays second fiddle to your intellectual output and musical input), you can make it happen. As we move closer to Gemini, you'll notice that your career is picking up speed, becoming more interesting even to you.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)
Good news about the folks at home or the house, more money for your personal use, but not enough to make a real difference until the 25th and, as this week ends, a more realistic approach to the kids. If you're having an affair with an older lover or a crush on your mentor, what happens this week could be pivotal. Although a lot is going on, you might not be emotionally involved and instead feel more like an audience than an actor. Didn't Momma say there'd be days like this too?

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)
Big deal for those on the brink. As the sun opposes Pluto in Scorpio, something comes to a head. Whether your partnership is about love or money or a little of both, a critical moment occurs this week that can tip the scales. Since Saturn is being so heavy handed, you might miss out on some fun, lose sight of the humor in the human comedy. Chit chat about writing, neighbors, gossip and fancy folk continues but has little effect except when it threatens your finely honed sense of security.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22- DECEMBER 21)
The work becomes more varied, the spiel more amusing and insightful, the audience younger, thanks to Mercury, messenger of the gods. There's a monetary reward because you're swift or mobile (upwardly, laterally?) enough to reach for it on the 25th. But there's a down side, an aging effect from dealing with elderly neighbors, a troubled sibling or your editor. Until the sun gets to Gemini and changes the equation, don't indulge too heavily in bad habits and be more security conscious in the car, around the neighborhood.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)
Talk the talk, walk the walk. Your Saturn ruler receives tons of attention from literate folk and students (dare we say devotees) of your particular skills. Take their comments to heart but don't sacrifice whatever humor you can glean from this week's mish mash of events. To some you'll be a hero, to others, maybe those you're exploiting, a cad. And while it may not be in the cards you're holding right now, a payoff is coming. The pressure to disavow your allegiance to a group peaks this weekend. What gives?

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)
News about where or with whom you're living or intend to, particulary for those Aquarians born close to either cusp. If you want to revitalize or rescue your job or trade it in for one with more power, then pay close attention to the signals your boss emits. A not so subtle change occurs as the week ends and strict Saturn moves out of your sign. Don't celebrate your release just yet, it'll be back in July for a seven month stint before it's gone from Aquarius for good (or another 29 years.)

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)
If lately it's been too quiet to suit your love of drama, then you'll be glad to know that Gemini and the complicated games one plays during this period is about to shake your foundation, maybe uproot you from your routine. But you won't make the change lying down. Expect to wax eloquent, perhaps put into words what you've been threatening to expose all year. More schooling looks particulary good right about now, so spend some hours leafing through course catalogs instead of J. Crew's.

IMPROPER IMPERSONALS

Feel the urge to unleash your frustrations or vent your hostilities on an unsuspecting friend or enemy? Look no further than the Improper Impersonals, a forum designed for pranksters, irate neighbors, relatives, maniacs or any would-be target of your acid tongue. Best of all they're FREE! Send your Impersonals to us at Improper Impersonals, The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146. Or fax it to us at 232-4305.

Hey! Rodent with the Ax,
I say your face, I saw your body and I'm finding more and more on you every day. At first I was looking behind my back, soon begin looking behind yours. Even if I fail, I will NOT QUIT! Vindication will be mine. I will find you.
Early morning victim at Faneuil Hall

Yo, Wacko,
I would have expected a little more tolerance from someone named after an act of masturbation.
G.

Martin, Ross, Mike (for a minute) & Matthew,
Generation X sure can drink, eh? And dance, and sweat, and plain get nuts. Even on a freakin' Thursday night. Hope you were hating life as much as Nicky and I on Friday. Good to see the years have been good to us Sparkies. Good luck at Berkley (you big brain), hope things remain Constance, don't shoot yourself in the foot again, and send me your clips. Want to hear your stories.
XO,
Shue

Chang,
It stuns the mind how a once benevolent being can so easily transform into the most intolerable fuckhead & loser this side of Jupiter (excepting your father, who committed the graver inexcusability of impregnating your heathen mother). On sheer paranoia, you obliterated 5 years of friendship in the span of 5 minutes. Y'know, I once remarked (to no one in particular) that the foulest criminals are those who violate the trust of loyal friends, save for those who falsely accuse them of such transgressions. You're a dung beetle. Eat shit.
Cujo
P.S. Has anyone seen my pancreas?

Jeff,
Thanks for the lousy time. You know "J" also stands for "jerk." Do you really think that I don't remember what you did to me just because you got me drunk?? I still have bruises on my chest, thanks to you. Compared to you, Atilla the Hun was a sensitive lover. It takes more than a big weenie, buddy boy. You must think "finesse" is a French disease. You left a bad taste in my mouth in more ways than one. You should live to be so rich that you have a thousand servants, each one shoving motor oil down your throat.
Melissa

Brian,
Yeah you – from Delaware. It's me, Malzone (at B.U.). Saw you at the Crowes concert last Thursday in Worcester. Okay, so I didn't remember your name, but I did want to talk and see what's up. Call me if you have the inclination or I'll just see you at the beach.
Tom at the Bank,

To Tanja, Lauri, Charline,
Ha Ha! I have the last laugh – you thought you dusted me! Each time I got sober and you got madder. Ha!
Johnny Mac

What an appropriate name for someone who enjoys sucking the life out of his employees! It's amazing that you still have your job. I guess that's what happens when you surround yourself with peers who are as slimy as you are. You didn't give your employees a raise in over three years but made sure you got a new company car, a huge annual cash bonus, and several "Business Trip" vacations on the bank's expense. How could you knowingly let your own secretary embezzle almost $100,000? She didn't happen to sleep with you, did she? At least someone else caught her. I'm tired of seeing fellow employees and myself being treated like lowlife garbage. And I'm sure your customers don't enjoy being cheated by you. You will soon get everything you deserve. You really suck and I hope you die slowly and painfully!
Have a nice day!
Your Loving Employees.

Miss Thang,
The men all paused...
Wench Boss

This is to "Robert Redford":
You really are an asshole.

To Achmed (of the Love Den),
Keep your towel on & I.D. unchopped. It's time to bash.

Dorian,
She's only 19!
A concerned admirer

Kurt,
You scumbag, sack of shit, good for nothing son of a bitch, you are the most evil, malicious, moronic, brainless, motherfucker I have ever had the displeasure to associate with. If you gained 10% in the intelligence area you would still be negative -90%.

Dave,
You womanizer.
The girls

Dainsy Wainsy,
You lied to me. You hurt me. Don't play with fire because you'll get burned. You may get run over by a car. I hope you suffer. There is always a price to pay for pleasure. I will be that price and it will cost you.
Your "Love,"
Choucroute

To the "You Think You're Bad" Bladers at Kenmore,
If only you could be as extreme as we are!
M&D

To Steve Z., The Stud Boy,
We hear hair loss in men only means all that testosterone is being used for more important things.
With love from,
Rich's Fan Club

Hi, Sarah W.,
This is where you work. . .see, I'm not a loser like you say. . .

"E" Bacthler,
Why can't we just get along?!?
"Stubbs"

Dear Lisa,
If you weren't interested in breast bondage, you should have said so early on in the process. Even still, you looked great. No hard feelings.
Louis

Zoocums,
Why do we all have to be this way? Anyway? Here comes the rooster coming over to Little Miss Dangerous. Crazy, go nuts.
You're the best!

Craig & Jim,
You guys suck.

Steph,
Someday, somehow, maybe it wasn't meant to be. But if it was, let's just take what comes and screw the rules.
Woody

Miss Cathy S.,
That party last week was unforgettable. The grace with which you move across your living room floor moves me deeply. Understand that it is possible to fall in love with a medicine man. Call me.
Jeff

Ragdoll,
There are so many things I would love to say to you. I honestly do not know where to begin. You are most definitely NOT AS SENSITIVE as you think you are. My sympathy to Christina.
Love Always,
"An enamored listener"
P.S. If voodoo works, you should be in gonadinal paralysis.

Okay, you're right. You're always right! No getting married. No exclusive relationships. No stancking breath. Everything else, Fair game!

Demi,
I luv you.
X

To my sunshine and my lover,
You guys are the best whores in the world. . .I love you.

To all the stuck-up people,
I'm sick of all you people who think that school is such a fashion show (not, you distort what fashion means.) Once you get a brain, let me know.

!,
I said I would jot down a few lines. You said all I have is my license. She said what elephant? They both said I know I don't think I've paid for a beer yet. Yes, and a nice day at that. . .

Hey Rembs,
I'm not letting you out of the bathroom until you smoke one of my mother's cigarettes.
Your hippy roommate
P.S. Your balls are beautiful.

Dear Michelle,
You are ruthless and cruel. You definitely deserve the woman you will probably marry!! I hope you catch some sort of sexually communicable disease, you dirty whore! -ME!

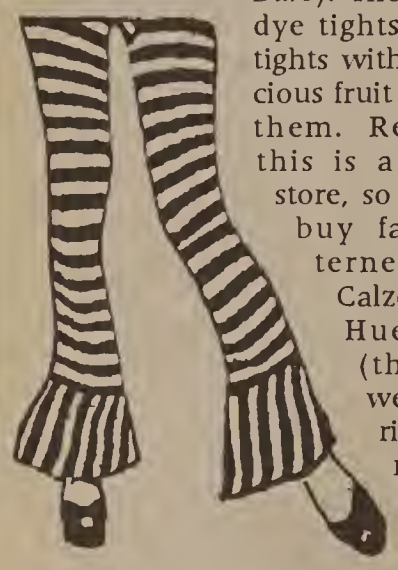
The Man Behind The Money



State Treasurer Joe Malone

The Conspicuous Consumer

by Mopsy Strange Kennedy

Legs Go Tights

"Our store is messy," says the owner of Super Socks, not without pride, and therein lies part of its allure. There's a schleppy ease to looking through the plenty, the variety, and the sometimes self-mocking glitz of the tights, socks, stockings, and pantyhose here. Some of the history of fashion has been scrunched into micro-form, with bell-bottom pants reincarnated as stripy tights with frou-frou bell-bottom parts (reminiscent of Madonna in Truth Or Dare). There are tie-dye tights, too, and tights with pale, luscious fruit printed on them. Remember, this is a discount store, so when you buy fancy patterned Dolci Calze Ergee or Hue tights (there's a well-known, ribbed style) made clingier with some lycra, you're getting them on the inexpensive. There are lots of modern micro-fibers here, so slippy and skinny to the touch, they feel like real silk stockings – and the colors range from somber greeny golds to interesting pales, and shades of black. The price of cotton and wool is going to rise next year, but Super Socks has them, a deal and a steal, for $6. Should you know (or be) a cross dresser, this is a sympathetic place to get your gear. Also, the outrageous is available in "exotic dancer" style, ones that have zippers or lace-ups, tights that overflow with marabou, or naughty fringe, or a tiny gold seam up the back. Garter belts, which are making a comeback with younger women who never had them as a burden, can now be enjoyed as an erotic diversion. Or come here for E.G. Smith's comic socks, printed with Mona Lisa, or with an elephant and a donkey. Very expensive, till you amortize them over years of wear, are the very luscious $50 Austrian Wolford micro-fiber tights.

Imaginary Vistas

Gail Martin's own house is full of things that aren't there; the Puffin sitting on a disarranged pile of yellow National Geographics in the bathroom, the tousled cloth, draped wantonly on the bedroom wall, the shiny kitchen tiles that aren't. Moldings merely painted on flat ordinary walls, depth-suggesting niches, and shadows cast by nothing more than paint are part of her repertoire. These decorative specters appear as entire murals. You can luxuriate over one at Enzo's Restaurant in Brookline where a huge, soft neo-Classical landscape stretches throughout the place, including a huge structure clinging to rocky cliffs, poplars, statues, monuments, a reflecting pool, balustrades – the whole Italian nine yards. Back at home, a marmalade cat (based on her own) presides plumply on a railing. Elsewhere, she has filled hallways with ivy and birds, and even painted a dog on a door, eternally watching trompe l'oeil mail slither through the slot. A very elegant screen with ornate decoration was another commission. Martin "opens" cramped hallways with "windows" to nowhere, suggesting light, and one of her kitchen creations had the "trellised" inside of the cabinets festooned with sexy vegetables, ripe forever. When not working pictorially, she marbleizes, sponges, and invents coppery surfaces. She even has painted some chairs – art imitating casual distress – so they look like they need to be painted.

The Kissing Game

One of the things that's new with this sex tome is that the writer, Bernie Zilbergeld, doesn't put himself on some Olympus of eroticism. Instead, while talking about modern sex, he talks about his own sex life, too. This can mean Zilbergeld talking about picking up a woman at a conference and being surprised at the displeasure of the disconnected sexual encounter. Or, on the other hand, it can also mean him celebrating the wildness of sex that isn't always only tender. In a chatty, easy-going tone, Zilbergeld takes on many questions about sex, acknowledging that there's a certain cultural 'men-are-oafs' trend, which he argues against in a good-humored way. Teenaged boys reading Playboy, he notes, are not monsters of chauvinism, etc., but are curious, energetic, life-affirming, charming. He proposes many useful exercises in communication about sex – practicing saying "no" (yes, men get to say "no," too), openly receiving feedback about sex, getting a kissing lesson with verbal commentary. Like a cool older brother, he gives good advice on how not to be defensive about matters romantic and sexual, and generally encourages a man to be a mensch. While a lot of what he talks about is in that region where relationship matters metaphorically echo sex itself – and can be improved there – he gives lots of good, specific advice about dealing with sexual problems, including how to handle the lousy feelings that go along with them. Partly because it is so informed by respect for women, and partly because it's so winningly guy-ish, it's a good book for women to (eavesdroppingly) tune into as well.

The Issue at Hand

Mim Michelove

It's been nearly two years since we first set up shop in a converted warehouse in Brookline Village, and it's been nearly that long since I've chained myself to the word processor to set ideas onto the printed page.

Ideas can be potent things, and when placed into open minds, they can generate action. When we began The Improper Bostonian, we started with two computers, some old doors for tables, a stack of resumes, and potent ideas, the main one being to create a great newspaper, one without peer; one in which the reporting was entertaining, insightful and a tad irreverent. Not an easy goal.

Our staff was recruited on the merit of being both insane and gullible enough to believe we could actually pull off this project, and tough enough to see it through when our future seemed uncertain. (Being able to survive indefinite amounts of time without sleep didn't hurt either.)

With our initial team possessing minimal, if any, practical media experience, we created a newspaper the only way we knew how. And, 37 issues later, with hard work, a focused dream and a little BS, our goal has paid off.

Today, as deadline pressures have finally calmed to manageable levels of chaos, I proudly dedicate a new era for The Improper Bostonian. In this issue, you'll find what we hope are significant improvements to our publication. Look between these pages for a renewed sense of vision, action, and ideas. We have revamped our methods and styles to bring you more of what you've requested: better reporting, editing, photography, layout, clarity and a more Improper voice.

All this wouldn't have been possible without enormous dedication from a staff of exceptional individuals. We ask that you take a look, read through, give a call and tell us what you think. But don't call between the hours of 11p.m. and 5a.m. We'll be fast asleep at our desks.

Improperly yours,

Marjorie Clapprood

"Six-Inch Heels, Painted Nails and Candid Humor"

by Megan Gilmartin

Don't expect saccharine sweet or politically-correct conversation from talk-radio host and politician Marjorie Clapprood. "I could really care less if people agree with me," Clapprood says, in her take-me-or-leave-me tone of voice. "I just enjoy provocative, political debate." And debate she does, diabolically, every morning on WRKO.

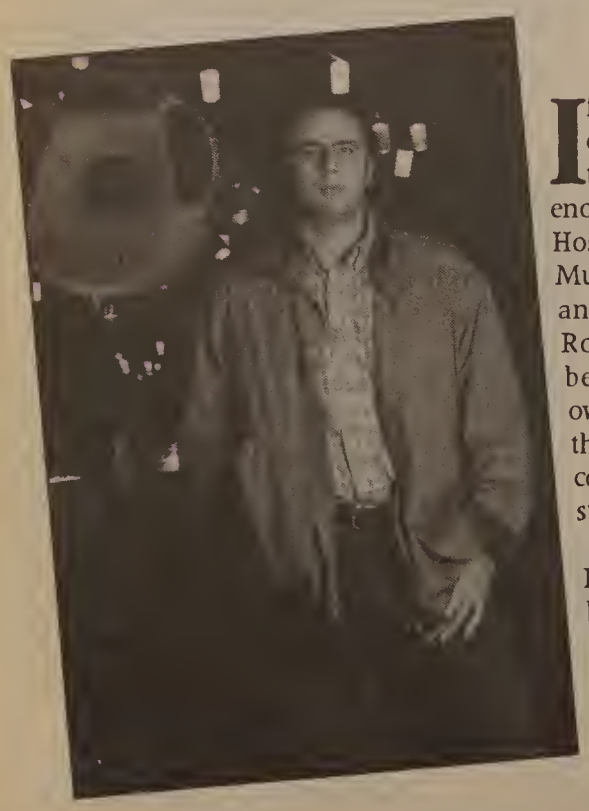
"Thanks to Natalie Jacobson and her wonderful interview with John Silber...I get paid an obscene amount of money to kick the stuffing out of the two guys that beat the democratic ticket in 1990," Clapprood says. "I have the best job in the world!"

Clapprood describes her on-air relationship with co-host Pat Whitley as "symbiotic and oxymoronic."

"Pat is just an extraordinarily wonderful human being," Clapprood laughs. "I'm just horrified by his political beliefs...I don't hold him responsible; I think it's because he wasn't breast fed as a child."

Clapprood is a self-described risk taker. She remembers when she was offered a job at WHDH and a lot of people told her she was "crazy" to take it. "Suppose you flop?" they said. "Then I flop," she replies (almost flippantly), "and then move on to something else."

Clapprood equates her brash attitude and resilient nature to the fact that she grew up with next to nothing. She tells stories of a childhood spent growing up in the projects, living off of welfare and eating with food stamps. She recalls learning at a very young age that "the sense of self-worth is really the only thing that you get to take to the grave."



"I've known an awful lot of people who lead a cautious life. They never step outside the boundaries...they leave no legacy." Clapprood is, however, quick to add that she does not take herself seriously. "I cannot stand egocentric, stuffed shirts," she says vehemently. "I think an awful lot of people need to lighten up."

Clapprood says she does not set out to offend, rather, she tries to provoke her audience to think about issues and get involved. "I have no filter mechanism," Clapprood says in defense of her sometimes irreverent and outrageous commentary. "If it's in the head and the heart, it falls out of the mouth."

What about future plans for poljtical office? "Well," Clapprood replies, giggling, "I plan to return to politics long before I become menopausal...but I think that until the office of Zyrena Queen of the Universe opens up, I'm going to follow the course that I'm on now." ❑

Manos Linos

The "Crown Prince" of Boston's Euro Kingdom

by Nicole L. Mills

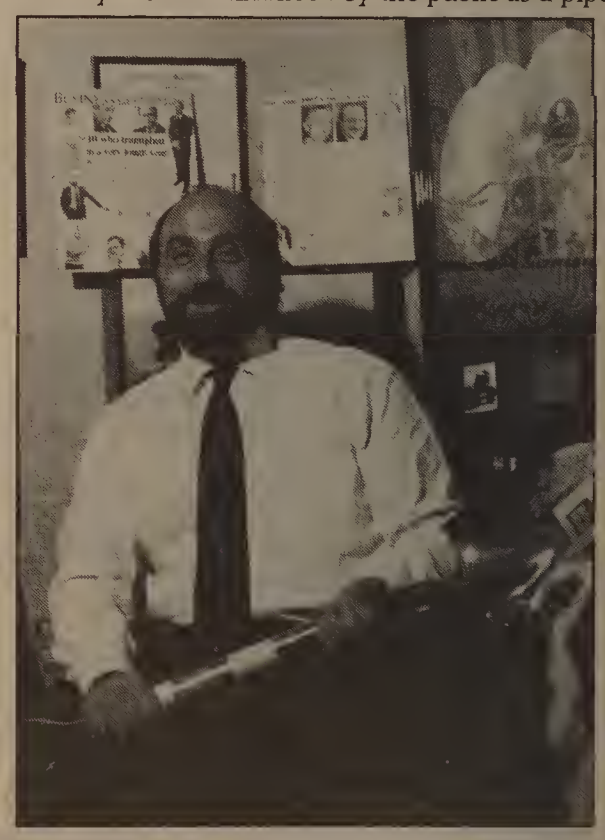
If you haven't been to one of the clubs promoted by Manos Linos yet, then you obviously don't get out enough. Manos and his two partners, Hossein Shandoulou and Christophe Muller, are the force behind Europa and the Friday night bashes at the Roxy. Manos and his partners had been promoting for other club owners. Their success (and seeing all the money go to other people) finally convinced them that it was time to start their own venue.

The glamorous concept behind Europa is regarded with suspicion by "proper" Bostonians, but Manos himself is a somewhat unlikely club czar. For someone who creates such a see-and-be-seen atmosphere, he's remarkably unflashy. He's reticent about having his picture taken, and he prefers to be somewhat in the background, letting his clubs claim the attention.

There is, of course, competition for that attention. It's hard to be the new kid on the block in what has essentially been a one-kid town for 15 years. A while back, some other promoters in town got together to throw a "Unity Ball," which intentionally targeted the international scene. Manos calls it "Promoters against Europa," saying "A lot of people did go to the Unity Ball, but then they just showed up at Europa later. Nobody really understood what the Unity Ball was for."

But Manos doesn't worry. "As far as the international scene, we own Friday and Saturday nights in this city. Other clubs keep trying to surprise us with new things, and I just have to surprise them back." ❑

Larry Moulter



Larry, Larry Quite Contrary, How Does Your Garden Grow?

by Chad L. Sanborn

Neither the B's nor the C's survived the first round of the playoffs. But Larry Moulter, point man on the six-year negotiations for a $160 million multi-purpose Boston Garden replacement, has won in the second round of the playoffs, and seems destined for a championship. In fact, Moulter, president and chairman of New Boston Garden Corporation, won the first playoff round in February, when the state legislature approved the new arena, now named The Shawmut Center.

From his Causeway Street office (adjacent to the Garden), Moulter looks past the green underbelly of the expressway, out to the city he so obviously loves. Moulter moved to Boston in the late 1960s to attend Northeastern University. "Like a lot of people that come to Boston to go to school, I loved it so much I stayed," he laughs.

Barrel-chested and outgoing, Moulter, 43, bounces lightly around his office as if sparring in a ring, quick to laugh and put you at ease. The fact that he weathered the stop-start negotiations with the State, on a project rumored about for more than 25 years and dismissed by the public as a pipe dream, is a testament to Moulter's sense of humor, and his tenacity. When he took up the new arena development reigns, Moulter was well aware of the quagmire that is Commonwealth politics.

"I wasn't surprised [by the contentious negotiations], having worked in both levels [of government; I] know how the game is played. I [use] the word 'game' because that's what some people do – play games."

Moulter is quick to defend the naming of the new arena, by noting that the marketing relationship allowing Shawmut Bank to attach its name to the center, "a privately financed building," will provide a windfall in excess of $30 million over 15 years. Still, Moulter himself slips at least once, violating the party line by referring to the new arena as "the New Garden." But he always catches himself, with a wry grin. ❑

TWO WEEKS WORTH OF IMPROPER PICKS

VOGUE
Choreographed movement flows through Mark Morris, June 7

➤WEDNESDAY, MAY

26 Want to be the critic? Long to give thumbs up or down? The ICA (955 Boylston Street) is presenting the premiere screening of The Painted Princess, an animation film created by award-winning filmmaker Pooh Kaye. Lights dim at 8 p.m. Call 266-5153 for more information.

➤ THURSDAY

27 Memorial Day weekend looms; everyone gears to leave town. Our advice? Bag the weekend traffic. Stay in town and hit a tony outdoor cafe. The Rattlesnake's roof deck, outdoor tables at the Cactus Club, Cornucopia, Joe's American Bar and Grill, Spasso or Ciao Bella: perfect ways to celebrate summer's start.

➤ FRIDAY

28 The King of "Dead" is here – dead-pan humor, that is (yuk, yuk). Comedian Tom Agna is headlining at Catch a Rising Star (Charles Playhouse, 76 Warrenton Street). Now see him in the flesh. Tickets are $12; 8:30 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. shows. Call 426-3737.

SAM SAYS!➤

Help SideWalk Sam deface the city at the Paint For Pets, June 3

➤ SATURDAY

29 An early summer's afternoon. The Green Monster. Brewskies and dogs. Sunshine (well, maybe). Yes, it's the Red Sox versus the Texas Rangers. What better way to spend a day out of the office? Call 267-1700 for tickets. Prices will vary, game starts at 3 p.m.

➤ SUNDAY

30 Rejoice! Tomorrow's a holiday. Go out and play. Where to? Two clubs consistently jam on Sundays: Esmé at Marais (1 Boylston Place; 482-7799) curries to those looking for sophisticated socializing, or Venus di Milo (11 Lansdowne St.; 421-9595) offers Hip Hop, House and Funk.

➤ MONDAY

31 Want to shiver from fear and lust? Sliver, and you will. William (the sexy brother) Baldwin, Sharon Stone and Tom Berenger are smoking up the screen in this made-for-summer Martin Landau movie production. Catch it at the Cheri or Chestnut Hill.

➤ TUESDAY, JUNE

1 "I could have watched all night..." Lerner and Loewe's timeless musical comedy, "My Fair Lady," thrills the Colonial Theater through June 20. Actor Richard Chamberlain shines as linguist Professor Henry Higgins, and Melissa Errico of Les Miserables is Cockney flower girl Eliza Doolittle. For tickets, call 931-2787.

➤ WEDNESDAY

2 Art Nouveau is the 19th Century phrase for art that uses flowing lines and organic motifs: think Gustav Klimt and Edvard Munch. The Museum of Fine Arts has pulled together a collection of these works, and called it the Age of Art Nouveau (catchy, no?). Call 267-9300 for more.

➤ THURSDAY

3 Sidewalk Sam is ready to deface the Boston's City Hall Plaza, and you can help. "Paint For Pets" means drawing a huge chalk mural on the bricks to celebrate the MSPCA's 125th birthday. Legalized graffiti! From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; for more, call 244-3171.

➤ FRIDAY

4 Books and Gaelic brew appeal to you? Head to the Brendan Behan Pub (378 Centre Street, Jamaica Plain) and catch two fantastic Irish authors, Patrick McCabe (The Butcher Boy) and Michael Collins (The Man Who Dreamt of Lobsters). Both will be reading from their latest. Call 522-5386.

➤ SATURDAY

5 Clued out on architecture? Wouldn't know "art deco" if it bit you? So take the Art Deco Society's walking tour of Boston architecture; you can chose either a downtown or a back bay tour. Starts at 11 a.m., runs two and a half hours. Tickets $12. Call 787-2637.

HOT PICK

"'Enry 'Iggins?" The classic tale of Pygmalia is played out in the Colonial Theater's "My Fair Lady," starring Richard Chamberlain and Melissa Errico, on June 1

➤ SUNDAY

6 The Copley Society is challenging over 70 painters to, in six hours, produce "fresh-air" original works. The results will be sold at the Copley's 5th Annual "Fresh Paint" Auction fundraiser, at the Dorothy Quincy Suite, John Hancock Hall, starting 6 p.m. Admission, $20. Call 536-5049.

➤ MONDAY

7 Dance Umbrella is bringing the Mark Morris Dance Group, an Avant-Guard dance company, to the Emerson Majestic Theater for two programs. "Program A," June 1-5, features Home. The Man Behind The Money

State Treasurer Joe Malone

by mark semonian & nicole mills

The Commonwealth's chief money man and its third highest-ranking Republican is safely at the first plateau on his political climb. He is content and relaxed, settled into his position and starting to gain popularity, admiration and praise for his self-styled independent status and congenial manner. And though some may disagree, Joe is generally credited with unusually effective management of state resources.

In the political ring, Joe Malone fights with a concealed drive, displaying a learned and steady caution. His style: hit and block with consistency, wisely choose opponents, and take care not to over-extend. He understands well that, while being considered an underdog, he may emerge victorious merely by being the last one standing conscious at the end of a bout. In time, political opponents will become tired and frustrated in the search for a weak spot in which to land a shot, but Joe Malone stays cautious, steadily biding his time.

Typically, the Office of the State Treasurer has lacked a high profile appeal, but since the election of Malone, the first Republican to hold the office in over twenty years (and a strong possible contender for higher office), all eyes are on the man who controls the State's purse strings.

Malone exists as an anomaly in state government, one of three lone Republican figureheads in a Democrat's State House. Both he and the Governor occupy separate and distinctive niches in the mind of the electorate. Weld, as the razor-sharp-witted Brahmin, is a master of public persona, while Joe Malone is the everyman's politician.

Born into a middle-class family, Malone was transported from the ethnic neighborhoods of Waltham to the privilege and opportunity of Phillips Academy Andover, and later, Harvard University. It may be this peculiar mixture in his background that has created his popular appeal. After all, his prior occupation, owner of a health club, is not necessarily typical training for the State's top money man.

Malone also has an imposing physical presence. One look at the conspicuous crook in his nose and images of Italian pugilists come to mind, though Joe is not a trained fighter. He's an athlete at heart, with a deep-seated drive to fight and to win.

After convincing Joe to "box with the budget" in the treasurer's vault for our cover photo, we met with him in his downtown offices, and discussed the man behind the money.

The Interview

How did you end up at Phillips Academy Andover?

"My mother had always pushed me to go to Phillips, starting at the ninth-grade level. I'm the youngest of seven kids; there was a tradition of all my brothers and sisters going to Waltham schools. When I was a kid, I always thought it would be neat to go to Waltham High and play on the football team. So her suggestion of my going to a private boarding school was not something I responded to in a positive manner. But then there was the second option, which was to do a post-grad year, and I thought that was a terrific option. It afforded me the opportunity to meet an awful lot of interesting people, to learn a lot, to improve study skills and all in all, it was positive.

Would you consider yourself an academic?

I was someone who had a broad range of interests, one of which was academics, but by no means would I say that I was an academic. Take college, for example. I was playing football and bartending at a place called Jack's [while at Harvard University]; it was a bar between Harvard and Central Square. It was the bar Bonnie Raitt got her start at in the early 70s. I bartended there from '74 to '78.

A lovely cast of characters was working there when I was there, including Mike Lynch (now sportscaster for WCVB-TV, Channel 5) and Mike Dukakis' future daughter-in-law, who was working there before she married John Dukakis. I'd definitely recommend to any person out there in college or in their college years to do something with that much direct involvement with the public. It's a great training ground. I can remember working there the first night, a freshman in college, very wet behind the ears – and I thought that I had seen the whole world and was a very urbane fellow – and suddenly, it was like whoa! There are people here that I never realized existed. That type of an experience is a real eye-opener.

Are there any similarities that you can see between running a bar and being in politics?

You develop this sense where someone walks up to the bar, and in some cases the sense they give off is, "I want you to make me feel important." And you then respond to that. And then there are other people that say "Leave me alone, I don't want you doing anything else but pouring me my beer."

It shouldn't be a case of the world adjusting to the mood you're in, in my business; it's going to be a case of [you] adjusting to the moods that different people are in.

Were you politically ambitious as a child?

My involvement came about as a result of my parents being supportive of John Volpe's campaign for governor in 1960. As a result of their support for him, the discussion at the dinner table often times was politics. So I can remember going to grade school and being very tuned in to what was happening in elections. I can remember my sixth grade teacher sending a note home to my mother saying your twelve-year-old son knows more about government than I do, you ought to make sure that he keeps his focus.

What made you decide to seek public office?

I wasn't sure if I ever wanted to become a candidate. I thought it was fun to be working behind the scenes, helping other people to get elected. There was a point that I got to where I was wondering if I was ever going to work for a candidate who got elected in Massachusetts, because I was supporting the Republican side. That's the point at which I said "The heck with this, I'm going to give this a shot myself, and see what comes about." My thought was that, at the very least, I would achieve a result. I would either find out whether I am properly suited to be a candidate and an elected official, or whether it just wasn't for me.

So at the age of 33, for the first time in my life other than running successfully for student council president of Waltham High School, I ran for office against Senator Kennedy, and learned a heck of a lot even though it didn't result in my getting the number of votes required to become senator. And along the way, I think I built some credibility, built an organization, built an understanding of how the system works, so that in 1990, I was able to get elected.

What was it like running against Ted Kennedy?
It was a race where mental strength was more important than anything, because it is so easy to get discouraged when you're running that kind of uphill battle. Every hour of every day I would be reminded of just how uphill it was. If I was going to an event where there was supposed to be 50 people, and there were only 12 people there, you could walk away saying "Why am I doing this, no one knows I exist." If you then went into an editorial board meeting and allowed their first impression to get you down, then you would walk away discouraged.

But instead, I kept on looking at the portion of the glass that was full and getting more filled by the day. And took the campaign sort of section by section, and looked to the little successes as opposed to worrying about the poll numbers at the end of the line. And as a result of doing it that way, we spent eight or nine months winning friends and building some strength.

When election night came, I didn't think of it as a defeat, I thought of it as a giant step towards achieving our goal. I always thought it was extremely important for a Republican to prove that a Republican could get elected in Massachusetts.

What does Joe Malone do for fun?
I love sports and am married to a woman who is also a sports enthusiast. Linda and I are Celtics season ticket holders, we have been since Larry Bird's second year. I recall lots of good memories going into championship games and watching the Celtics play inspiring ball. Linda and I spend a lot of time with our kids, a three-and-a-half year old and our 11-month old. Whether it's taking them to a picnic, Drumlin Farms or to other places.

Who is on the Joe Malone required reading list?
Harry Truman's biography, [author] Peter Drucker, Megatrends 2000, The Last Hurrah.

Why Harry Truman?
I think we are living in a day and age where people are frightened to death of taking any risks whatsoever. I don't know whether that's because there's so much media out there that communicates messages electronically, and can send a message around the world as soon as you slip on a banana peel. Or maybe it's that we're in such a legalistic society, where there are lawsuits everywhere. People just seem to be very, very cautious.

Harry Truman, in my opinion, was someone who listened to advice, he was willing to think things over, but once he made up his mind, he had no problem whatsoever moving forward. And to me, that's very refreshing. He worked hard at what he did. He never looked back and never second-guessed himself. To me, he personifies leadership.

Who are your heroes?
If this doesn't sound too personal, my mother is one of my great heroes. She was a widow at age 51; when my father died, she was left to raise seven children and take over a family trucking business. I was the youngest of seven at 12 years old. And she not only raised us all, but she also found time to be involved with community affairs; she's been on the Board of Trustees at the Fernald League For Retarded Children since Governor Volpe appointed her in 1961. She was just a wonderful role model in terms of her human qualities. She'd be number one on my list of heroes.

I'm also a big fan of Ronald Reagan and I'll tell you why: because again, he was someone who wasn't afraid to let people know where he stood. And if that led people to turn away from him, well, that's okay. "You've got to know where I'm coming from, and I'm not going to be out there trying to please all people."

I think history will conclude that Ronald Reagan made a tremendous contribution in terms of bringing about the end of the Cold War. And he had the conviction to see through his ideas of peace through strength. And that peace through strength eventually brought about a whole new world.

Do you wish to seek a higher office in the future?
I take great comfort in keeping in my mind that I can walk away from this business at any time. That allows me to take a more independent approach to governing. I don't have any great game plan worked out. If you asked me, the short term prospect is, I expect to be running for re-election and I hope to get re-elected. I think we'll have a good story to tell in 1994. Beyond that, I don't have the faintest idea of where all this is leading.

What would you be doing if you weren't in politics?
I know what I'd like to be doing; I'd like to be teaching and coaching, maybe at the high-school level. Interacting with kids. I know the experience I had in sports was a great experience, and I think it helped shaped my life.

Who was your favorite coach?
I had a guy at Phillips Andover named Steven Sorota. We won every game we had that year with the exception of one game, where we lost to Deerfield [Academy]. We had a 21-to-nothing lead at half-time, and ended up losing 22-to-21. And when we got into the locker room at the end of the game, Steve Sorota, who was probably in his early 60s at the time, in a very fatherly way said, "You will learn more from this experience of having lost today than you will from all the games you've won this season."

The way in which he dealt with us, knowing that we felt the hurt of losing that game, was just wonderful and pretty different from most I'd ever had. I can remember saying to him one day as he was walking off the field, "I notice you never yell at anybody, you have a very soft-spoken way of dealing with all the players." He said, "Well, I know that it takes 15, 16, 17 years for these kids on the field to build up some self esteem. And I do not want to destroy that self esteem in 30 seconds."

What parallels would you draw between the football game and the game of life?
Let me give you one example. I went through high school doing very well. I was the captain of my high-school football team and played both ways [offense and defense], went to Andover and started both ways. I got to Harvard and started on the freshman team and my hope was that I would someday start on the varsity team.

My big chance came junior year. Instead of me being put into the starting role, one of my teammates was. On that day, I went to the offensive line coach and I said, "I can do better than this guy and I think you just don't see that. And I think maybe it's time for me to hang up my uniform. I just don't want to do this anymore, if I'm playing for a coach who doesn't recognize my talent and sees someone as being more talented than me for this job."

And so I walked out of camp that day, and about a week and a half later, the defensive line coach called me and said, "You're missed out there, your teammates miss you, the coaches on the staff, including the offensive line coach, think that you belong on this team and would like you to come back. If you don't want to play offense anymore, come back and play for me on defense."

Well, I did that, and for about a year and a half went out every day and wasn't starting, but I tried to find a niche from which I could help. And so I then became that guy who, all week long in practice, did everything possible to make the practices be more spirited and make sure that the best job possibly was done by those reserves who were playing against the starting team during the course of the week.

To make a long story short, the night of the banquet the award, called the Henry N. Lamar Award which is voted by all the members of the team, was presented to me and I received a standing ovation that made me feel like I had just won the Heisman Trophy.

The lesson in that experience was that in life there are always going to be people who are bigger or stronger or faster or smarter or whatever the case might be, but if you find your niche in life and if you remain positive and you try to do the very best you can, then good things occur as a result. So going from that atmosphere and that experience, to then going into the real world, and particularly the political world, I never got discouraged ❑

I take great comfort in keeping in my mind that I can walk away from this business at any time. That allows me to take a more independent approach to governing.

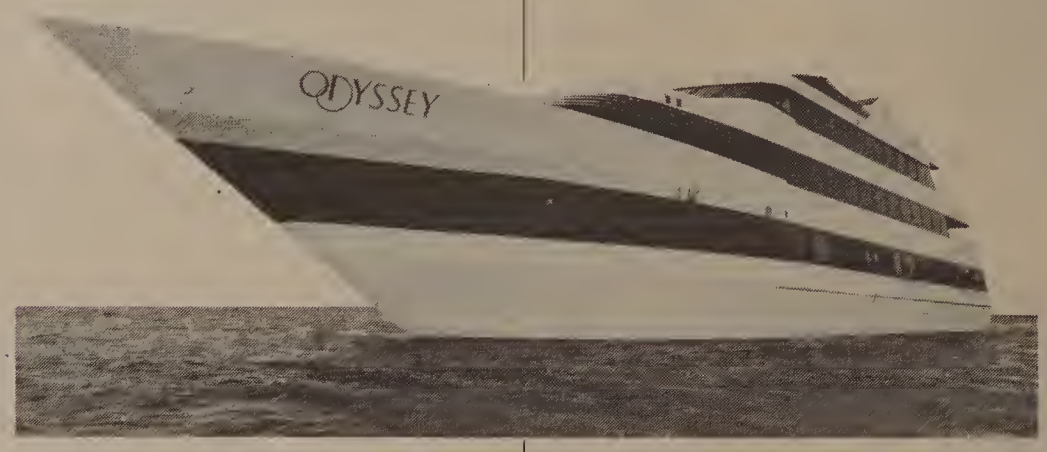
WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

MOVIES

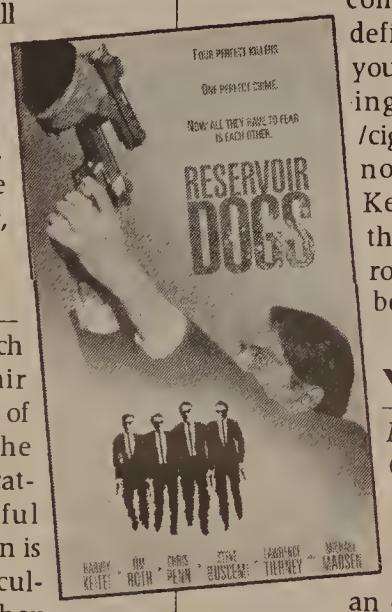
Posse, directed by Mario Van Peebles. Starring Van Peebles, Stephen Baldwin, and Big Daddy Kane, this western saga tells the story of the African-American cowboy experience in the Wild West. Sure to provoke conversation, as well as entertain.

MUSIC



Sting, June 4, at Great Woods. The ex-frontman for the Police is back touring behind his latest release, Ten Summoner's Tales, and will bring his unique blend of pop, jazz and southern hemisphere rhythms for one show. Tickets are available through Ticket Master, 931-2000.

SCENES



Boston Pops at the Hatch Shell. Fans of open-air tunes rejoice at the start of the Pops season at the Hatch Shell theater, located along the beautiful Charles River. The season is short this year; shows culminate after July 4, when the Esplanade Orchestra takes over. So hurry up and see John Williams before he's gone! Call 266-1492.

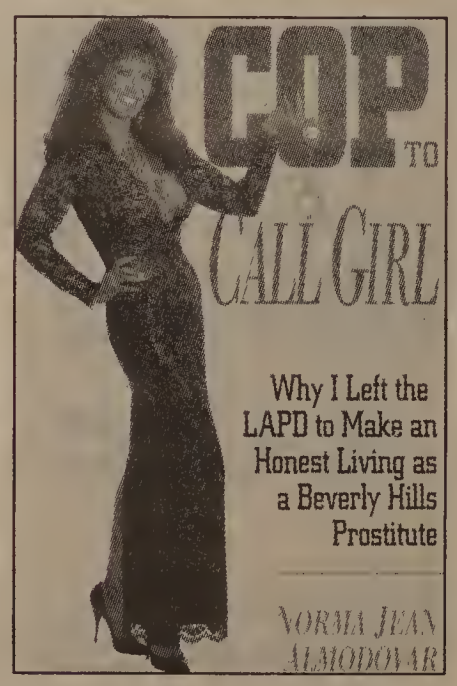
RECORDINGS

Tell Me Why, Wynonna Judd. A new release from the daughter half of country music's famous mother/daughter duo The Judds. This latest solo effort carries on the family brand of cross-over country music, firmly establishing Wynonna as one of the leaders in the mainstreaming of country music.

The Jack Kerouac Collection, Rhino Records. Though it's not brand new, this three-compact disc box set is the definitive listener, whether you're involved in the emerging coffee house /poetry /cigarettes scene or simply a nostalgic aging beatnik Kerouac muses on everything from jazz, America's roads and, of course, Uber-beatnik Neal Cassidy.

VIDEOS

Reservoir Dogs, directed by Quentin Tarantino. This innovative blend of humor and ultra-violence depicts Harvey Keitel as an oddly moral L.A. jewelry thief, confronted with a heist gone terribly wrong. Also starring are Michael Madsen and Tim Roth as the much more sinister members of the elite gang of thieves.



RECREATION

Atlantic Ho! The dinner cruise ship Odyssey starts docking at Rowes Wharf June 8, offering Bostonians the opportunity to get the first look at this latest addition to the waterfront community. A 175-foot yacht with gourmet cuisine, entertainment and room for 600 passengers, Odyssey offers lunch, dinner and Sunday brunch cruises. How handy! Call 654-9700.

HOT EATS

"Cuisine of the Americas" is the newest fave among city diners. This means food with Caribbean, South and Central American influences – hot, hot, hot! The perfect spot to catch this is Claremont Café on Columbus Ave. in the South End. Outdoor café dining, terra cotta dishes, deliciously spicy foodstuffs. Call 247-9001.

BOOKS

Cop To Call Girl, Norma Jean Almodovar. From police officer to prostitute to prisoner, the author has walked on every side of the law. Now she's written about it in a shamelessly titillating, tell-all book. Odds are Cop To Call Girl is available at just about every bookstore in the world (Simon & Schuster, $21).

BALLET

June 1-20 are the final day for Boston Ballet aficionados to experience "Romeo and Juliet" at the Wang Center. Tears will flow! Last show of the season. Tickets are available through Ticket Master, 931-2787.

OUTDOORS

Boston's Emerald Necklace Park. Everything has gone green in the Boston Common, the Public Garden, Commonwealth Ave. Mall, Back Bay Fens, Riverway, Olmsted Park, Jamaica Pond, Arnold Arboretum and Franklin Park – lifestyle trompe l'oeil to escape the urban environs. Call the Boston Parks and Recreation Department at 635-4505.

FASHION

Men's Wear: The Banded Collar. The latest evolution in men's fashion is an omission rather than an addition; specifically, losing the collar. Banded collars, or "grandpa shirts" as some call them, look like regular casual shirts sans flapping neck wear. Spotted from Newbury to Hollywood, banded collars go well with shorts, jeans or Chino-style pants.

TIME INDEFINITE

Written and directed by Ross McElwee. At the Brattle Theatre through June 3.

Ross McElwee, Boston-based documentarian, hit a public nerve with his autobiographical Sherman's March (1987). The crowds came out to root Ross on his wry, merry way: a sardonic trek through the American South, 16 mm camera clamped on his shoulder, searching for Love. Even those who decry a cinema of male obsessions about women were disarmed by McElwee's self-deprecating civility in the battle of the sexes, and charmed by the buoyant end of Sherman's March. Returned home, by the green grass of Harvard, the filmmaker seemed to have located The Right Woman, a graduate student in the Divinity School.

Did they get married? Do they live happily ever after? How about kids? For years hence, McElwee has been set upon by Sherman's March fans, eager to know.

So he provides an update with Time Indefinite, a feature-length documentary sequel. First answer: he marries someone else, filmmaker Marilyn Levine. Second, they do live happily, in an anxious, cramped-apartment, modern-couple way. Following a gloomy miscarriage, they have a son, Adrian. It is baby Adrian – peering out into a thorny world – who ends the new film.

Be warned: Time Indefinite isn't as instantly ingratiating as the earlier film. In fact, it's sometimes painfully strained when McElwee rambles on, trying to be funny in his voice-overs: "Does a fish have a soul?", etc. But eventually, Time Indefinite finds itself. As McElwee returns to his native South, seeking reasons for the demise of his seemingly healthy doctor father, the documentary opens into something deeper, much darker, more genuinely philosophic and significant than its predecessor.

In Time Indefinite, dying is everywhere. The film becomes submerged in it, smothers in it, as the investigatory journey to North Carolina, so deceptively flowery in Spring, devolves into an almost archetypal Orphic journey into the mordant Underworld. Afterward, McElwee returns to The Living, his marriage and child in Boston.

McElwee's filmmaking also intersects the fertile Southern literary tradition, with profound results. McElwee echoes Poe in his brooding, masochistic dwelling on the details of death, and fellow North Carolinian Thomas Wolfe in his obsessions with his childhood home and dying father. In Time Indefinite, it is Lucille, the African-American maid of the white McElwee clan, who holds the precious secret on enduring this disappointing world: that's Faulkner country, and the immortal servant, Dilsey, of The Sound and The Fury.

VISIONS IN LIGHT.

Directed and written by Todd McCarthy, Stuart Samuels. At the Coolidge Corner Moviehouse.

Visions In Light is a dizzying paean to a host of ace Hollywood cinematographers, from The Birth of a Nation's Billy Bitzer to Blue Velvet's Frederick Elmes. This wonderful documentary insists that it's the unheralded cameramen who often deserve the real credit for making movies soar as "art." Visions backs up its claim with scene after scene of magisterial visual splendor illustrating the signature talents of various Hollywood cameramen: among others, Lee Garmes, William Daniels, Arthur Miller, Gregg Toland, then, and Caleb Deschanel, Vilmos Zsigsmond, Nestor Almendros, Gordon Willis, now.

Do these names register? It's only the cinematographers themselves who really know, and genuinely appreciate, each other's work. As Italian director Bernardo Bertolucci's cameraman, Vittorio Storaro, observes about assigning the greatness of Citizen Kane: "From Bernardo's point of view, it's Orson Welles. From my point of view, it's the cinematographer Gregg Toland."

Various artists. At the Institute of Contemporary Art.

A vibrant, energetic feminist and lesbian media collective, Fishnet has hit Boston with a splashy six-part "Undressing Crossdressing" film and video series at the Institute of Contemporary Art. The final fun evening, Friday, May 28, twins a program called "The Social Body: Technology and Stigmata" at 7 p.m., with "Rebels, Irreverence and Girl Power" at 9 p.m.. The 7 p.m. show features postmodern literary queen Kathy Acker in Stigmata and postmodern porn queen Annie Sprinkles in Linda, Les, and Annie. The 9 p.m. show includes GB Jones's post-John Waters Yo Yo Gang, an all-girl Toronto street rumble, and Girlpower, the latest post-New Wave tape by Milwaukee wunderkind, Sadie Benning, a young lesbian who is redefining autobiographical video. I Was a Teenage Godard. Call Fishnet at 433-7100. ❑

Characters come and go in director Michael Steinberg's desert tale. Nothing happens and nobody gets anywhere...but that's the point. Beth (Bridget Fonda) loses Nick (Tim Roth) when he suddenly leaves their Arizona town for Butte, Montana. (Why Butte? Why not?) Beth sleeps with Sid (Eric Stolz), who is painting the apartment she'll vacate the next day. Sid falls in love with Beth. Nick loses his parents. Sid loses Beth. And so on. Phoebe Cates, who plays Nick's ex-girlfriend and Beth's best friend, is at rest, at least temporarily; she drinks, gets stoned, and doesn't get involved. The movie is exasperating, even silly at times, but it has moments when it shimmers like a desert mirage.

K. WILSON

DRAGON: THE BRUCE LEE STORY

As do so many bio pics, Dragon promotes the legend more than it portrays the man, and it keeps a rushed "and then he...and then he..." pace, asmusic swells to let you know something important is happening. Jason Scott Lee as Bruce Lee (no relation) is a charmer. The kung fu fights are flashy, if bloody, set pieces which propel the story. Above all, the movie is an exposé on racism: Lee watches Mickey Rooney play a buck-toothed Oriental buffoon in Breakfast at Tiffany's; he promotes the idea for the successful T.V. series, Kung Fu, but loses the lead to a Caucasian; Chinese martial arts masters condemn Lee for teaching whites. Ironically, Bruce Lee comes across as an all-American hero.

Ivan Reitman's Capra-esque comedy gleefully sticks it to the Republicans. Kevin Kline is a delight as Dave Kovic, an exuberant, generous, small-town guy who so resembles the President (a mean tight-assed Yalie) that he becomes his full-time stand-in. Dave's agenda – giving people in need top priority – pits him against Bob, his reptilian Chief of Staff (the wonderful Frank Langella) and allies him with the estranged First Lady (Sigourney Weaver). Like its hero, the film is high-spirited, but it loses its edge and becomes cloying whenever more than one "nice" person is on the screen at a time. Dave is to the Fourth Estate and the Beltway what The Player is to Hollywood.

K. WILSON

Twenty-four year old director Robert Rodriguez made this action picture for $7,000, and it's great fun. A young mariachi singer (co-writer Carlos Gallardo) gets caught in the middle of deadly feud between a vicious drug lord (Moco, who always wears white) and his partner Azul (who always wears black, even though his name means "blue"). The movie opens with a cleverly edited prison ambush sequence and speeds towards its Road Warrior-like conclusion. Rodriguez gets good comic mileage out of inanimate objects such as a portable phone and beer bottles, and he even paves the way for a sequel. The amateur cast is surprisingly good. In Spanish.

Diana (Demi Moore) and David Murphy (Woody Harrelson) are deeply in love (they have sex and say "I love you," a lot). But they are desperate for money, so when a handsome billionaire (Robert Redford) offers them a million dollars for a night with Diana, they take him up on it. Then have to pay the piper. Like Pretty Woman, Indecent Proposal is a cynical paean to our consumer society disguised as a romance. So why weren't Demi's clothes as nice as Julia's?

K. WILSON

LÉOLO

Fat, raw meat, flies, and feces: all figure prominently in Jean-Claude Lauzon's Léolo, as do words, dreams, poetry, madness and sunken treasure. A young boy from a Montreal slum calls himself Léolo (he dreams of Italy) and writes obsessively. We learn about his grotesque family: his stupid, piggish father who's obsessed with bowel movements; his lewd grandfather, who pays the young girl next girl to suck his toes; his dear, slow-witted brother whose overgrown muscles can't protect him from his own cowardice. It's obvious things are getting out of hand when the untimely death of Léolo's pet flies is upsetting. The film is surreal, dark, and despairing. In French.

Director Vincent Ward's latest film – about an Innuit Eskimo (Jason Scott Lee) and the half-Indian, half-European love of his life (Anne Parillaud), who become caught up in the marvels and the horrors of the white man's world – is a clunker. Big chunks of the movie don't connect; they're like icebergs breaking off from the mainland and floating away. Ward bombards us with images: X-rays and maps appear so often that they lose their meaning .Too many show-stopping aerial shots do just that – stop the show and overwhelm the viewer. But better a magnificent clunker than a mediocre "success," any day.

K. WILSON

MENACE II SOCIETY

The comparison with Boyz N the Hood is inevitable, except that Boyz gives you reason to hope; Menace doesn't. Twenty-year old directors Allen and Albert Hughes show how one generation passes on to the next a legacy of violent, destructive behavior, emotional numbness, and hopelessness. Caine (Tyrin Turner) is an L.A. gang member. The son of drug addicts, he saw his father shoot a man to death at home. His friends and family offer him some ways out, but try as he may, he can't escape the cycle of violence. The Hughes brothers are talented, and you can see them experimenting and borrowing. Sometimes they hit, sometimes they miss, as in their brief, unsuccessful Spike Lee sex scene.

K. WILSON

Michael Caton-Jones' film of Tobias Wolff's autobiography presents a small triumph of the human spirit. Toby, a young teenager (Leonardo DiCaprio) moves all over the country with his mother (Ellen Barkin, doing her best acting in years), as she tries to escape abusive relationships and find a decent job. When her spirits flag temporarily, she marries a bullying auto mechanic (Robert De Niro) from the remote town of Concrete. Although De Niro is convincing when he's flinging Toby against the refrigerator or brutalizing Barkin in bed, he gives a surprisingly one-note performance. However, DeCaprio's performance is simply outstanding: honest, heartfelt, and utterly without guile.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

"...How Disappointing Then, When Benedick and Beatrice Declare Their Love After Only a Few Minor Skirmishes..."

BY KAJ WILSON

Directed by Kenneth Branagh. Based on the play by William Shakespeare.

The opening of Kenneth Branagh's Much Ado About Nothing is energetic, full of fun and promise. Leonato, Governor of Messina (Richard Briers) and his entourage are picnicking in the bright Italian summer sun on the hillside above his magnificent villa (former home of the Mona Lisa). When a messenger announces the arrival of Don Pedro, Prince of Arragon (Denzel Washington) and his victorious army, all hell breaks loose.

The picnickers rush shrieking and shouting down the hillside as the soldiers advance on horseback. Once inside the villa, women race through the halls, strip and shower. Outside, the soldiers strip and jump bare-assed into a pool. Music swells in anticipation. The men don impeccable white uniforms; the women, flowing white dresses. The soldiers arrive at the gate, and the festivities begin.

Benedick (Kenneth Branagh) and Beatrice (Emma Thompson) set eyes on each other and immediately resume their long-standing quarrel. They are worthy adversaries, precursors to all the modern, smart, snappy, sexy big-screen couples we love, and we happily anticipate an hour or two of witty verbal warfare capped by their inevitable realization that they're perfect for each other (which we, of course, knew all along). How disappointing then, when Benedick and Beatrice declare their love after only a few minor skirmishes.

Couple number two, Claudio (Robert Sean Leonard) and Hero (Kate Beckinsale) are beautiful, but too young and too much in love to be amusing. The plot thickens when Don John (Keanu Reeves), Don Pedro's bastard half-brother, tricks Claudio, who is by nature jealous and easily gulled, into believing that his Hero is a shameless hussy.

When Don John's treachery finally surfaces, Don Pedro postpones punishing him so as not to interrupt the revelry. But there's no getting away from Don John: he brings out every man's dark side. Take Claudio. After Don John's insinuations, he thinks nothing of physically and verbally abusing Hero, without even bothering to question the evidence against her. Until he learns the truth, he is self-righteous, callous, and cruel. Even Hero's father is quick to believe the slander, and slaps his child. Their behavior casts a long shadow, perhaps unintentionally.

Beatrice's nature is as sunny as Don John's is dark. Besides sporting quite a tan, she's full of fun (although she takes being merry very seriously). Never doubting her cousin Hero's innocence, she convinces Benedick to break rank and defend her honor. Emma Thompson is lovely in spite of too many unflattering, almost distorting, close-ups. Director Branagh isn't picking on her, though; he does it to everybody. After the lively opening sequence, the movie slows down cinematically, as the director relies too much on close-ups to tell the story. However, the plot moves at a gallop, and the combination leaves little room for tension to build; it keeps us at a distance.

Keanu Reeves' Don John is stiff; he has two expressions: the sneer and the scowl. But Reeves is a handsome villain with his black clothes – all swarthy, sweaty face and skinny black beard – and he seems at home stomping around dark, torch-lit tunnels while everybody is upstairs having fun. Michael Keaton as an idiot constable acts as if he escaped from another movie (somebody feed this man a bug), but the Bard and Branagh accommodate him, and he livens things up. Denzel Washington gives the entire affair dignity and gravity. Back is the charisma that disappears whenever he works with Spike Lee. ❑

BREAKING FUNNYBONES

Waging a War of the Wits with the Improvisational Theater League

BY ROSS GARMIL

Every week millions of Americans relax with a bag of Doritos and enjoy an action-packed episode of "American Gladiators." They sit back and watch, as people travel to California in order to be trampled, repeatedly hit in the head, and placed in Velcro nouveau-torture devices, all in the pursuit of victory. The popularity of this twentieth century homage to the Inquisition makes a definite statement about our capitalist culture – we, as a culture, thrive on competition, no matter how stupid.

Yes, we love watching people we don't even know humiliate, maim and defeat other people we don't even know. This is true for comedy as well. For just as the American Gladiators have their cattle prods or whatever it is they use, so to do the members of the U.S. Improvisational Theatre League (ITL) use their comedic skills to maim their opponents. Well, they don't really maim people; they don't maim people metaphorically, either.

In fact, most of them have never even killed a man in cold blood listening to his cries for help echo through the empty alleyways of the cold, heartless city. But then again, how many of us have? Rather, the members of the ITL compete using their talents of improvisational comedy (commonly known as improv) to humiliate, outwit, and ultimately defeat their opponents in a battle of talent and wits.

IF YOU GO

ITL COMPETITION

THE ROXY
279 TREMONT ST., BOSTON
227-7699
DATES: WED, MAY 26, WED, JUNE 2, SPECIAL BATTLE OF THE SEXES SHOW WED, JUNE 9.

Unlike other improv troupes, the ITL does not take suggestions from the audience. Rather, their performance is based upon a given title and other limitations including time, number of characters, and genres (i.e. in the style of Shakespeare). From this information, the performers create their comedy on the spot.

But the ITL strives to be more than just comedy – really, it's theater. The performers don't merely go for the quick laugh. Rather, the ITL teams create, to the best of their abilities, entire scenes of theater. They are funny, but they are also actors who possess the impressive talent to create full, coherent scenes, when done right.

However, improv for the ITL is more than just comedy and theater. For them, it's a sport. The performers belong to different teams who use their talents to out-perform the opposing team. Referees not only instruct the teams on their assigned skits, but also penalize performers for a variety of fouls ranging from "Not Respecting the Title," to "Third Rate Acting". The ITL's anthem (that's right, they have an anthem) states the group's goal of putting on a show "with theater skills and music fills all played like ice hockey." They may not hit each other as much as hockey players, but they do play three twenty-minute rounds, and to help create atmosphere, the ITL will be playing at the Roxy over the next month inside the walls of their own hockey rink (sans ice).

They also do not forget their audience. When you enter an ITL show someone hands you an old, rolled-up pair of socks (don't worry, they're clean). Why do they give you socks? Well, to throw at them, why else? You see, when you don't like a particular actor, line, referee's call you may voice your opinion by hitting the guilty party with an old, rolled-up pair of socks. The audience also plays the most important role in the ITL: it votes on which team wins the competition. You make the call. So go see the ITL and you'll be presented with not only humor, but also an impressive and serious display of theater talent. Plus you'll get to throw some socks at people. ❑

Theater Review

Those the River Keeps

"...A Skillfully Written Work of Considerable Power..."

BY NANCY LEONARD

David Rabe's "Those the River Keeps" is a powerful, hard-hitting play, perfectly formulated to leap full-grown from the Hasty Pudding Theatre (where it's part of the American Repertory Theatre's New Stages Series) to the main stage of America's commercial theater – preferably with its two male leads intact. This new drama about a life and death struggle within one man's psyche seems destined for high acclaim.

The author, who began his career in the early 1970s with a series of explosive plays about the Vietnam-era military experience, turned to other subjects and to screenwriting as the decades passed. His last play, "Hurlyburly" (1984), was a cynical take on Hollywood. Dissatisfied with the Broadway production, Mr. Rabe reworked the play for a 1988 Los Angeles production. As part of this process, he discovered that one of the characters, Phil, deserved to have a play of his own. This former hit man and aspiring actor, struggling with a troubled marriage and a troubled life, now takes center stage.

The latest work is set around the same time as the first act of "Hurlyburly," and shows how Phil is trying to step out of his cloudy past and build a new life he can call his own. After eight years in the slammer and with the blessings of the mob, he looks to California and the movies as a fresh start. Though desperately repressing his prior life – even to the point of not remembering his precise involvement – Phil is now caught in the uncertainty of auditions, for which he's had no training, and in his new wife Susie's equally desperate desire to have a baby. Already the father of three children, who hate him, and mindful of mayhem in the world – himself, actually, as one of its sources – he's been putting off the family business.

During the first act, it's difficult to relate to Susie's emotional needs, which are tangibly represented by the diapered teddy bear she totes around their living quarters. Some feminists may be put off by her obsessive focus, though the author mitigates this with information about her childhood, spent growing up in a desert wasteland. But the play is not about Susie. She is only one polarity in Phil's life, and as the action proceeds, she comes to represent the positive life force that can rescue him from his chaotic existence. "I just want my turn," he says, as he makes clear that he loves his wife, but fears that a baby will deprive him of that opportunity.

The other, even more dramatic polarity is represented by an unexpected visitor. Sal, a longtime associate from the old days, has come to California to take someone out, and calls on Phil for help. Sal meets with resistance, but his brooding menace and disparagement of Hollywood take their toll. He sneers at Phil's pastel existence – it's for "mooks" – and stokes warm feelings about life back East. There's guilt wrapped up in this nostalgia, everything from the guy Bobby they put into the river, to the bloody demise of Tony's dog. Sal has swept in like the wind, and is laying claim to Phil's soul. This world, which Phil still carries within him (though he insists he walked away from it and changed), is a torment to put down. But it's the only world he has when Susie throws him out after a fight – the fight precipitated by the very things he would deny.

Sal's presence forces Phil to confront his past, and he doesn't like the undertow sweeping him away from stability. When Phil pounces on his friend and seizes his gun, he recognizes that with one shot "My life would be over." The explosive rage is shattering nonetheless. It makes him even more desperate to retain his new life.

The play is constructed with deft simplicity and an authoritative playwrighting voice that is, by turns, prosaic and poetic. Rabe makes the life and death struggle raging within his central character plausibly emerge as the focal point from vivid facts and casual conversation. Everything is very purposive, and seemingly throwaway lines appear to serve dramatic ends. In describing his latest hit, for example, Sal cautions Phil never to beg, then relies on this point of honor in their standoff; yet in their last scene, Phil explicitly and repeatedly "begs" Susie to save his life.

Serio-comic riffs dot the landscape, easing tension without breaking the mood. One of the funniest has Phil trying to explain that the movies had something to do with his desire to leave the mob. Sal, uncomprehending, sees only mass upheaval if everyone wanted to change his line of work just because he saw a film. In the second act, Rabe brings on Susie's friend Janice, whom she thinks is supportive but is actually domineering and scornfully judgmental about the marital breakup. Janice adds some colorful energy to the play, and enables us to learn more about Susie. But their scene together seems mis-written as female dialogue. Here, it feels as though we're back in the barracks of the author's earlier plays.

Under Rabe's considered direction, the proceedings are taut and compelling. The performances are understated and, for the most part, wonderfully on target. Paul Guilfoyle has Phil's hoody, East Coast manner down so right he seems not to be acting. His anguish and love are very real. Jack Willis is superb, too, as the darkly menacing Sal, whose first smile comes well after his arrival and a meticulously poured drink. The actor is mesmerizing in the almost absurd mix of wariness and warmth. These two fine actors would add luster to any future production.

Candy Buckley has a small but splendid turn as Janice, whose overpowering denunciations have the opposite effect from what she intended. Rebecca Tilney's Susie is a bit shrill and one-note wearisome in the first act, but she comes into her own in the duel with Janice, and is truly moving in the final scene with Phil.

Loren Sherman's set – a conventionally if economically furnished living room backed by a picture window, with a small kitchen area off to one side – is light and airy in a vaguely California style.

"Those the River Keeps" (the title refers to victims of gangland hits, and the imagery is used in separate ruminations by the two men) is a skillfully written work of considerable power. It should have a bright future. ❑

OUT OF THE BLUE
Back Alley Theater
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
A shipwreck leads to love, mistaken identities and, well, cross-dressing in Shakespeare's romantic comedy "Twelfth Night," performed May 27-June 26. Shows are Thurs.-Sun. at 8 p.m. and there is a 4 p.m. matinee June 26. Call 576-1253 for more information.

SUGAN THEATRE
Black Box Theater
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
Written for the Royal Shakespeare Company, "Mary and Lizzie" is a dramatic fantasy loosely based on the fact that two Irish women, Mary and Lizzie Burns, lived with Karl Marx's friend Frederick Engles in the mid 1840s in Manchester, England. Runs May 27-30 and June 4-6; tickets are $12. Call 646-5983 for times and reservations.

TERRACE ROOM
Boston Park Plaza Hotel
64 Arlington St., Boston
"Forever Plaid," a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from "Nunsense" have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at 1-800-382-8080.

Over 900 people came to play at the Children's Museum on Saturday, May 22 for the annual Spring Swing event co-sponsored by The Improper Bostonian and The Steppingstone Foundation. Edibles were provided by restaurants such as The Cactus Club, Veronique, Bertucci's, Chan Gsho and Thai's Restaurant, while Absolut Vodka and the Commonwealth Brewery donated the liquid refreshments. Guests reverted back to their childhoods on the Children's Museum's interactive exhibits and danced to the hot music provided by DJ Izzy V and blues band Walk That Walk. The event was a great success and Steppingstone raised substantial amounts of money to fund their educational programs, which provide opportunities to inner-city schoolchildren. ❑

DINING

Restaurant Review / R.E. Brunson

Blue Room

Tried and True Blue

The first sensory impression that strikes a diner entering the Blue Room is not the sight of the colorful decor, but rather the scent of mouth-watering barbecue - meat roasting on a spit, and cooking on the grill. After your attention leaves the wonderful smell, you can look toward the comfortable dining room. Having heard of a change in both the kitchen and the menu, our party headed over for a taste.

The revealed a selection of grilled items with influences from around the world. For appetizers, we started with the clam and corn chowder ($4.50). The chowder was filled with fresh corn, red peppers, and chunks of sweet potato in a milky clam broth that was truly delicate and flavorful. Floating on the top were crunchy cornbread croutons, fresh sage, and a slice of roasted corn on the cob. All the elements combined to make a great light chowder.

Next came the Arabic salad and dip plate ($6.25). The plate was dusted with freshly-ground cumin and contained a hot grilled pita that had been sliced and arranged around two mounds of dip, and a mound of parsley lemon salad. The first dip, a smoky eggplant, was smooth and oozing with wonderful olive oil. It had a deep smoky flavor that came from grilling the eggplant. The other dip, spicy red pepper, was red and silky and gave a sharp burning tingle to the mouth. Both dips were wonderful. The final appetizer was the sweet anise-rubbed rare beef tenderloin. The beautifully done tenderloin slices were accompanied by a sesamed spinach and the condiments usually associated with sushi – soy sauce pickled ginger and wasabi (horseradish).

One of the specials, grilled grouper ($17.50), sounded interesting and was the first choice for an entree. The grouper was thoroughly blackened from its time on the grill, yet was moist and tender throughout. Simple yet satisfying, the individual who ordered this dish gave it a "10."

The other entree, garlic and herb crusted spit-roasted pork loin ($14.25), came with a thick slice of on-the-bone loin that was also moist and tender. Almost grilled out, attention turned to desserts.

Bypassing the selection of ports, cognacs, and grappas, our target was coffee and something sweet. Choices were the bourbon chocolate pecan pie ($4.95) and the lemon poppyseed cake with lemon curd ($4.95). The bourbon chocolate pecan pie came covered in whipped cream. It looked great but there was no chocolate taste evident in the filling, and it tasted like molasses to our palates. In contrast, the lemon poppyseed cake was tasty and moist – a real winner. It was covered in a wonderful tart, not too sweet, lemon curd (the kind one gets in Paris) and accompanied by fresh strawberries and whipped cream.

We returned the following Sunday for the first of what will become a Blue Room tradition on Sundays – Big Mike's Sunday supper. This is an all-you-can-eat buffet, $19.75 per person, that covers the counters in food like whole roasted pig, cheese biscuits, whole roasted grouper, smoked chicken salad, spare ribs, lasagna, vegetarian lo mein, salads, a tabie of desserts and more. A hearty recommendation! ❑

"...Wet Lunches at the Colonnade Hotel, a South Shore Discovery, Dinner Avec Toulouse-Lautrec..."

LIQUID LUNCH

The Colonnade Hotel has just remodeled its rooftop pool and to kick off the summer season, the hotel is starting a Wet Lunch Club during lunch hours, 11:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m., Monday-Friday. For a fee of $10, sun worshippers can take a dip, enjoy the view and have lunch. The fee includes use of the pool, changing facilities and a light lunch of goodies like chilled Cajun crabmeat salad sandwiches. So don't spend your lunch hour daydreaming of the beach; pool-side paradise is just around the corner at 120 Huntington Avenue. Call 424-7000 for information.

SOUTH SHORE SURPRISE

Imagine our surprise in finding a truly wonderful new restaurant on the south shore. Tosca, on North Street in Hingham is creating some of the best food around – in or outside of Boston! Owners Ed and Pat Kane, with the help of chef David Tannaccio from California, are offering a seasonal northern Italian menu that makes great use of their wood-fired grill and spit. Two of our favorites were the grilled greens – grilled radiccio, arugula and fennel in a pistachio vinaigrette, and grilled butternut squash raviolis in a cream sauce with toasted pine nuts. On the Tuesday night of our visit, the place was packed, so call ahead for reservations; 740-0080.

SUMMER FOOD FUN

The Boston Chapter of the American Institute of Wine and Food has several things cooking. On Wednesday, May 26, from 6 to 8 p.m., an inexpensive pairing of wine and food called Slosh and Nosh will be hosted at B.U. by Steve Johnson of Hamersly's and Walter Clay of Langdon Shireick. Inexpensive wines will be accompanied by summer foods – including items from the grill! (Look for Steve's article on grilling pizza in the current issue of Cook's Illustrated magazine.) The A.I.W.F. has also started a monthly supper club for its members. The club rotates to a different restaurant every month for food and socializing. Look for get-togethers at Marais in June and the new West Street Grill in July. For event or membership info., call the AIWS at 427-0538.

IVY LEAGUE

Owner/chef John Vyhnanek of the Harvard Street Grill in Brookline has been chosen by Restaurant and Institutions magazine to receive the nationally recognized "Ivy" award. The awards were started in 1970, with food service leaders nominating individuals to the ballot and the readership casting the votes. Chef Vyhnanek is one of only eight individuals nationally to receive one of these Oscars of the food service industry this year. Along with celebrating the award, he is also celebrating his fifth anniversary at the restaurant.

ART & FOOD

In his time, Toulouse-Lautrec was just as well known for his love of food as for his artwork. He produced a book called The Art of Cuisine with M. Joyant that describes favorite recipes that he loved to prepare for friends. On June 7-19, Chef Tolini of Le Bocage in Watertown will recreate some of Lautrec's favorite dishes like bouillabaisse and fricassee of rabbit. At the same time, there will be a showing of Lautrec's famous prints and posters. So come on over and have dinner with Lautrec. Reservations are recommended; 933-1210.

JUICY DETAILS

Joyce Chen's on Stuart Street will soon be remodeling. Il Nido restaurant has just opened on 257 North Street in the North End. John Geoffrion, a talented chef, is in charge of the kitchen. The Original Sports Saloon in the Copley Square Hotel is looking to open two new locations. Congratulations to Steve Elmont, owner of Mirabelle on Newbury Street, as he becomes the new president of the National Restaurant Association. Sorrento's in the Fenway is now serving wine, from Chianti to Dom Perignon. Chez Tata has just opened at 1616 Commonwealth Ave., Brighton. Open from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m., the restaurant offer a full menu of Caribbean specialties such as flying fish and plantains; call 734-8192.

SAVE THIS DATE

Michael Feinstein, famous for his interpretations of Gershwin and Cole Porter, will be performing at the Roxy on Saturday, June 19, to benefit the American Red Cross of Massachusetts Bay. Guests will enjoy a buffet supper and desserts provided by some of Boston's best restaurants and dancing to the White Heat Swing Orchestra. Ms. Neicey Boswell and the Roxy Dancers will also entertain. Tickets are $50 and $100, black-tie is optional. Call 623-0033 extension 282 for more information. ❑

DRINK THE LITE THING

". . .My Advice is Heretically Simple: Drink Whatever You Can Afford, Whenever You Like. . ."

BY SANDY BLOCK, MW

As the brooding season clutched its tentacles deep into the heart of April this year, I discovered myself plunging unaware into trance-like reveries. Evenings caught me forehead-in-hand before the fireplace, grappling through musty old volumes of Schopenhauer, with Gregorian chants bleating over the raindrops, and a dirge-like glassful of Hermitage as my soul's closest companion.

Finally, I've broken out the rather fantastic collection of seersucker suits for which I am locally famous, the music has lightened a few shades and so, consequently, have the wines.

Spring is the signal for a more relaxed, joyful esthetic. Grasp it while you can. This is the time to take to the great outdoors and wander, briefly filling our lungs with crisp, salubrious air before the sweltering misery of insects and instant perspiration send us hurtling headlong towards the nearest air-conditioner.

My advice is heretically simple: Drink whatever you can afford, whenever you like. Most importantly, immediately take all publications with wine rating systems, scores and other numerical admonitions and stash them away until you go back to thinking profound thoughts.

Still and all, if we hope to get in the seasonal groove, wine-wise, where do we turn? One useful way of classifying quality quaffs by style is to differentiate the bold, organic-tasting, fleshy specimens (which seem to generate their own body heat) from wines which are mercurial and icy. While some wines burn with a spicy glow, others transmit a shiver the length of your vertebrae. Without wishing to impose unduly quirky views, it has occurred to me that if you are coming in out of the cold you might want to consider drinking something warm. And vice versa.

THE SPRING LIST

So what is the wine for springtime in Boston? Obviously, the 1990 Bernkasteler Graben Riesling Spatlese Halb-trocken from the Pfarrkirche St. Michael, a lacy Mosel danseuse with the classical perfume of blooming flowers and peaches and the stern green taste of barely ripened fruit. Why? Apart from being simple to find and pronounce, it is just heaven with the creamy goat cheese I love. Of course, if you are not fully committed to perfection, you may try any old Riesling from the great spiritual motherland of Western Christendom, and see how it does.

WHY RIESLING?

Any number of sound reasons:

1) After the muted colors of fall and winter, you surely want something bursting with brightness that actually has fresh fruit flavor. A little sugar can't hurt either, if counter-balanced by matching tartness.

2) Good Riesling smells of the gardens; sweet herbal essences, young flowers, springtime ephemera.

3) Lower alcohol, more delicately constituted wines fit with dietary shifts towards dishes emphasizing pure, uncomplicated flavors. German Riesling, especially if from the Mosel-Saar-Ruwer, most often features moderate alcohol.

WHICH MEANS...

What all this amounts to is something eminently reasonable to the student of grape varieties and their characteristics. Riesling is among the grape types which possess low concentrations of a naturally-occurring chemical substance known as polyphenols. These reside primarily in the solid parts of the grape: the skins, seeds and stalks. They dissolve into a wine, giving it astringency, color, ruggedness of flavor. Phenolic compounds are also present in oak barrels, so that wines which mature in wood acquire higher concentrations.

Grapes with particularly thin skins, like Riesling, consequently show low phenolic strength. They make wines which taste more like fruit, thereby achieving balance through refreshing acidity, rather than elevated alcohol or tannins. For these reasons, they taste most appropriate in warm to hot weather. Other wines which fit this profile and can be cool and delicious in spring:

- Chenin Blanc, particularly wines from Touraine in the Loire Valley (Vouvray, Montlouis)
- Muscadet
- Pinot Blanc (or Pinot Bianco in Northern Italy)
- Sauvignon Blanc, especially if from New Zealand or the Upper Loire Valley.
- Many Italian Whites, but particularly wines like Verdicchio, Frascati and Orvieto
- Vinho Verde from Portugal
- Low tannin ripe, fruity reds such as Beaujolais and, surprisingly, some Loire wines like Chinon and Saumur-Champigny
- And, of course, if all else fails, there is never a time when Champagne is out of season.

Singing Sweet Soul

An Interview with John Secada

BY DAVID FENIGSOHN

Jon Secada is the latest from a long line of great pop male vocalists, drawing comparisons to crooners such as Smokey Robinson, Lionel Richie, and Al Jarreau. And while Secada, still in his 20s, is just beginning his career, he has all ready proven himself to be more than just a great singer – he is also a potent hit songwriter.

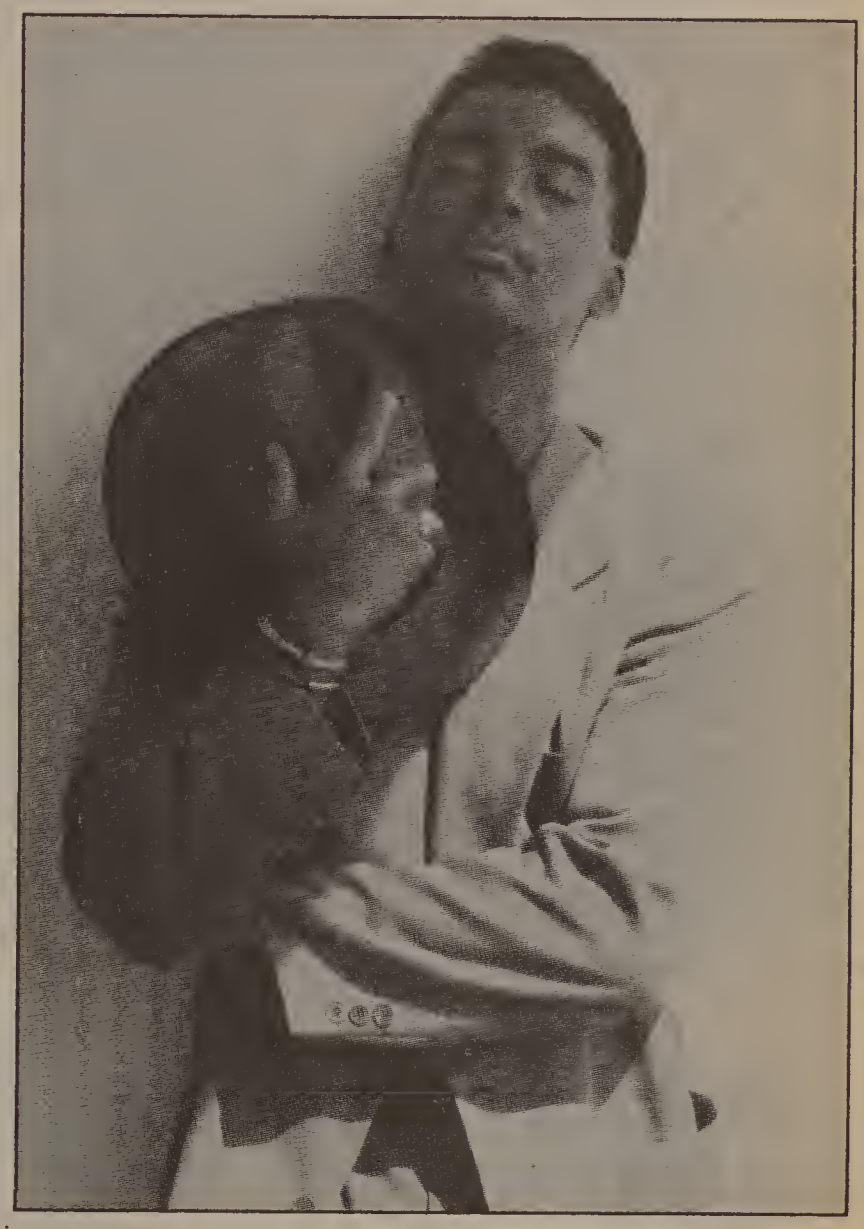
Secada has all ready written five top ten singles, both for himself ("Just Another Day Without You" and "Angel"), as well as two number one hits for his mentor, Gloria Estafan. Secada began his career as a song writer for Estafan, who immediately recognized his talent and gave him a short solo segment on her Into the Light world tour. Today Emilio Estafan, Gloria's husband, manages the Secada.

"I studied with the Estefans both as a songwriter and on production, which gave birth to my own solo career." Secada explains. "They are great people. Emilio is a great manager, and both he and Gloria have been so helpful. They have given me the opportunity to work with her, something I am grateful for. Emilio has great instincts as a producer, he is great person to have by your side – we have five-year relationship which I'm sure will keep going," he says.

Secada's songs are simple and catchy, perfectly suited for hit radio. While they lack depth, both musically and lyrically, Secada's delivery and his ear for what the public wants to hear, cover any other flaws.

"In my songwriting, the way we work is that I like to collaborate with other people and talk about a concept or an idea. We tend to write about what we have been going through in our lives. Our music is a reflection of personal experience. We begin by writing ideas down, maybe I have a musical idea, and then I take it from there," Secada says.

The formula has been highly successful. In addition to multi-platinum album sales for his self-titled debut (EMI), the Cuban-born Secada has also released a Spanish version of the LP which netted him a "Best Latin Pop Album" Grammy Award.



"I think, and sing, in both Spanish and English," he elaborates. "I was raised bilingually. To me, music is music, and singing is singing, no matter what language. I'm happy with my success, and I think it is partially a result of evolving in both Spanish and English. I believe the Grammy means that my career will be lasting. It is a sign of recognition and true respect after performing for a very short time period. I feel very fortunate. For me to be recognized shows I have respect in the industry as somebody who is here to stay."

Secada recently brought his live show to town, performing at the Second Anniversary Party for Mix 98.5 at Avalon. His live show proved to be soulful and dramatic, as many of his hits were performed in dramatic fashion, and often extended well beyond their studio lengths.

"I really like to stretch a song live," he says. "We create new parts. Doing so is the only way that you don't get bored. We are constantly finding new things to add in our efforts to keep it exciting."

Secada's biggest hits express the sentiment that the secret to writing hit songs is to be enthusiastic about what one is singing about. So Secada sticks to love songs.

"I like passion – I am very passionate. And with love songs, I like that I have the ability to express myself. I get into love songs more than I do any others, and so I can sell the performance of the song, merely by the fact that it is a love song, full of passion and romance." ❑

"Pops" Goes The Season

Farewell John Williams, Hello Boston Pops New Season

BY STEVEN D. BROWN

As has been known for the past year, this is John Williams' swan song with the Boston Pops. However, beyond the current season, Williams does plan to return as a guest conductor and to maintain an as-yet undefined role at Tanglewood. He will continue composing and conducting film scores, and he plans to devote more time to writing concert pieces. He will be missed.

Sharing the podium with John Williams this season are the orchestra's two resident conductors, Ronald Feldman and Harry Ellis Dickson (who has been a fixture at Boston Pops concerts since time immemorial). Guest conductors include Keith Lockchart, associate conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony and Cincinnati Pops (June 5 and 6) and Erich Kunzel, music director of the Cincinnati Pops (June 11 and 12). Isaiah Jackson, music director of the Dayton Philharmonic, leads the Pops on June 7 and 8 and returns for Gospel Night at Pops on June 13. On June 15 and 17, Robert Bernhardt, music director of the Tucson Symphony and principal conductor of the Kentucky Opera, rides into town for Wild West Night at the Pops.

Is there a doctor in the house? There will be on June 22 and 23, when Doc Severinsen dishes up a double dose of his medicine as both conductor and soloist with the Boston Pops. Bruce Hangen, music director of the Omaha Symphony, returns on June 26 and 27 for two nights, featuring the swinging sounds of the Big Band era.

From June 7 through 12, John Williams takes the Boston Pops on the road for a tour of Japan while the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra keeps the music coming at Symphony Hall. Williams will be on hand for Boston's favorite and most famous outdoor celebration, the annual Fourth of July concert at the Hatch Shell on the esplanade. He also returns in December for the annual Pops Christmas series. Also in the works is a recording for Sony Classical, featuring John Williams and the Boston Pops in a program of music associated with Frank Sinatra.

What we have seen in John Williams' tenure as conductor of the Boston Pops is a thorough professional who is utterly devoid of pretension, self-aggrandizement or vulgarity, one who is articulate yet soft-spoken, a highly focused artist who has elicited the highest level of musicianship from the Boston Pops. As of this date, a successor to John Williams has yet to be chosen. While there is a certainly validity to Williams' self-effacing view that the Boston Pops is an institution larger than any one person, whoever waves the baton as the orchestra's next music director will be faced with the challenge of maintaining the Boston Pops tradition while bringing it into its next era. A good many names have been considered thus far, but nobody at Symphony Hall has thought of George Martin. Perhaps they should.

Tickets are priced at $33.50 and $29 for floor seats, $24 and $22 for the first balcony, and $14 and $10.50 for the second balcony. Starting times for the Boston Pops concerts vary. Tickets are available at the Symphony Hall Box office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday and between 1 and 6 p.m. on Sunday. To order by phone, call SymphonyCharge at 266-1200. For further information or to arrange for group rates, call Symphony Hall at 266-1492. ❑

Coverdale/Page
Coverdale/Page
Geffen Records

John Bonham is gone, and Robert Plant will not reform. The idea of a Zeppelin recording/tour looks pretty bleak. Is there hope on the horizon for Zeppelin fans?

Regardless of the hype, the new Coverdale/Page release is outstanding. There are eleven selections, eight of which are solid, and six of which are great. The union of these two great musicians has been long overdue. There have been musical vehicles in the way, but these guys were meant to merge.

Jimmy Page's guitar work on the CD is his most inspired stuff in a long time. His Firm efforts were fine in the late eighties, but he seems more at ease with David Coverdale than he did with former Firm vocalist Paul Rodgers. Page has been yearning for that Plant-like writing style they once shared, and frontman Coverdale has just that type of quality.

The new Geffen release is chockfull of sure-fire radio and MTV hits. The first single, "Pride and Joy" has just what one would expect with the collaboration of these two. David Coverdale's raunchy lyrics harmonize wonderfully with Jimmy Page's superb acoustic and electric guitar phrasing. There's an added "Bron-Y-Aur Stomp" drum piece in there for a Zeppelin-essence, complete with some harp, thrown in for good measure. Another sure-fire hit is the opener "Shake My Tree," a real rocker about a obsessed young girl who won't give Coverdale time to rest.

Page's acoustic guitar is all over this effort, along with great electric soloing and layered track structure. Page's guitar chops in the studio are magnificent once again, and it's not hard to imagine how they will transform live. The blues ballad "Take For A Little While" brings Page back to his roots, and "Don't Leave This Way" has a blistering rapid-fire solo, with Coverdale's wailing vocals bleeding about a relationship gone bad. The lyrical content meshed with Pages' penmanship make commercial success a definite. And fans of the past should be more than happy to add it to their collection.

Porno For Pyros
Warner Brothers Records

Perry Farrell never wanted to be anything as vulgar as the "voice of his generation," but organizing the immensely successful Lollapalooza tours and fronting a band that tapped the core of 90s youth angst made him just that. His response? Break up the band and head for other goals. So it's a bit surprising that, having kicked Jane's Addiction, his next record (with new crew Porno For Pyros, with ex-Jane's drummer Stephen Perkins, bassist Martyn Le Noble, and guitarist Peter DiStefano) sounds like nothing more than the next Jane's Addiction album.

Farrell's voice still dominates, screeching louder than a 20-car pile-up, punctuated with random honks on a harmonica. The rest of the band provides a noisy, tribal drone, occasionally slipping into a kind of sly jazz that doesn't last long; the audience and the band are both too eager to pounce.

Lyrically, Farrell lets some of his mystery slip. Much of the poetic, often cryptic, wordplay of Nothing Shocking has been replaced by a sort of common cleverness. Tunes detail Perry masturbating to the televised riots, packing a gun, getting lit on bad drugs; he's clearly aiming to illustrate a kind of national character, but the art suffers a bit for the message this time.

JudyBats
Pain Makes You Beautiful
Sire Records

Ultra-sweet alternative/pop is what the JudyBats pride themselves on, and on Pain Makes You Beautiful, their third major-label album, the band lays it on thicker than ever. From the jangly "Ugly On The Outside" to the jumbled "Intense Beige," Jeff Heiskell's smooth but awkward voice shapes eccentric lyrics (like "I love you anyway/You're an intense beige/And that's okay" from "Intense Beige" and "I want to be good but good is being simple/Simple is forgetting/And I simply can't forget" from "Being Simple") into things that seem to actually make sense. "Scarlet" with its sighing background harmonizing with Heiskell's hiccuping lead vocals is also a standout.

The JudyBats have the ability to write pop songs that are infectious and addictive, but still somewhat elusive. The band's fans don't number in the millions (at least not according to album sales) but once won over they stay hooked for life. Pain Makes You Beautiful gives those fans more of an inside look into what's behind the catchy songs. The album and song titles appear to tell most of the real story ("Pain," "My Dead Friend," "Wasting Time," etc.) but on this song cycle, the JudyBats put a different spin on the downsides of life: Now they like them. And after listening to the album and hearing the way the band explains it all, you will too.

Dwight Yoakam
This Time
Reprise

With his latest album, This Time, Dwight Yoakam continues to produce one of the most consistently impressive bodies of work in contemporary country. Never a country rocker, but always a rockin' countrier, Yoakam draws influence from Hank Williams Sr., reminding us that this source helped quench the thirst of rock and rollers like Buddy Holly and Gary "U.S" Bonds.

Yoakam is as masterful with country ballads as he is with more up-beat songs. His "Home For Sale" draws a sketchy outline of a broken family, and lets us fill in the details: "Home for sale/Not all that old/A family's dream/Stands dark and cold."

It is Yoakam's ability to strike a balance between high energy songs and thoughtful ballads that makes This Time successful as an album. His great voice and strong guitar playing don't hurt either.

Beethoven: Missa Solemnis
Eva Mei, Marjana Lipopsek, Anthony Rolfe Johnson, Robert Holl
Arnold Schoenberg Choir
Clamber Orchestra of Europe
Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Conductor
Telec

Known primarily as a Bach specialist, Nikolaus Harnoncourt has recently been attending to the major works of Beethoven. As he did with his landmark cycle of the Beethoven symphonies, Harnoncourt uses modern instruments with the exception of valveless trumpets, narrow bore trombones and small timpani played with hard mallets. In taking this approach, he achieves a textural transparency comparable to what John Eliot Gardiner gets in his period-instrument performance on Archiv.

Tempos are a good deal slower than Gardiner's; the "Kyrie," for example, runs nearly three and a half minutes longer, but the impression is one of breadth rather than inertia. The solo quartet and chorus are undaunted in transcending the challenges of Beethoven's thorny vocal writing. For the listener, too, the Missa Solemnis presents its own challenges; it doesn't have the instant appeal of the symphonies. But for those who take the time to know it, the rewards are bountiful. Harnoncourt's cycle of the symphonies was among last year's Grammy nominees; this should fare similarly.

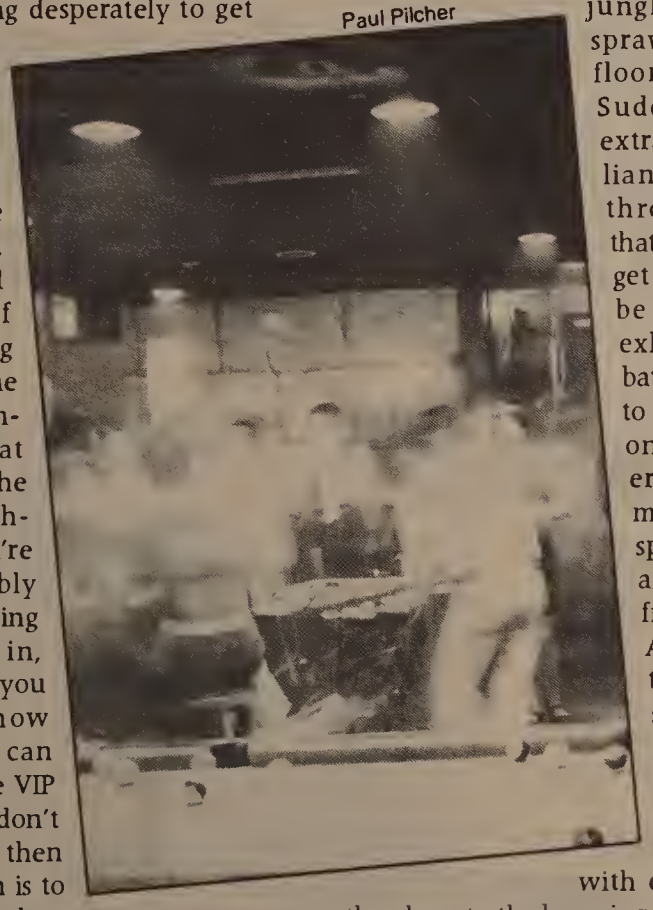
About Last Night. . .

GETTING EURO'D AT EUROPA

". . .The Euro Kids are Taking Over Boston's Nightlife, and They're Having Much More Fun Than You Are. . ."

BY LAUREN DARE, AKA THE LAST CALL LADY

For anybody who's been locked in a tomb for the past few years, I've got some stunning news for you: the Euro kids are taking over Boston's nightlife, and they're having much more fun than you are. But then again, if you really have been locked in a tomb, and if you're the kind of person who hates hedonistic pastimes – like dancing on the furniture with wild, semi-clothed nubile young beauties while listening to the best dance music this side of the Atlantic, drinking up a storm and randomly spraying bottles of champagne on Bacchanalian revelers whose wanton abandon and flagrant disregard for decent bedtime hours defies mortality itself – then I give you the Surgeon General's warning: Wednesday or Saturday nights at Europa will be bad for your health.



IF YOU GO

EUROPA

51 STUART, BOSTON
482-3939

Saturday night: I arrive at Europa's entrance to find myself surrounded by enough nationalities to represent the United Nations at a nightclub summit. Everyone is trying desperately to get the doorman's attention and convince him that they are important/beautiful/desperate enough to get in, and, at nearly 1 a.m., some of them are losing the fight. Everyone arrives "fashionably" late at Europa, but by the time you're fashionably late, you're also unfashionably relegated to waiting in line to get in, unless, of course, you happen to know somebody who can slide you into the VIP entrance. If you don't merit VIP status, then your other option is to arrive early enough to beat the line. You can always spend the time between your arrival and the peak club hour raising your body temperature listening to the hot merengue band in the downstairs bar, or shooting a game of pool.

Paul Pilcher

At about 12:45 a.m., seemingly from out of nowhere, slews of people miraculously appear in the club, wafting cigarette smoke behind them, kissing each other dramatically and enthusiastically on the cheeks, swiveling their Armani-clad hips, and eyeing the crowd to see who's here, who's hot, who's available and who's not.

At approximately 1:15, I downed the rest of my drink and checked around the room one last time to see if there was anyone with whom I would want to exchange meaningful dialogue or phone numbers before entering the fray. Then I navigated my way up the stairs, down a short hallway, through a door, and into the strobing, pulsing, frenetically-charged world of Europa. Bodies are whirling and spinning in every direction like dervishes, a veiled, heavily-mascaraed belly dancer jingles past, swirling her tassels. Lip-locked couples do everything but genetically combine on the dance floor. Someone rushes up to me and somehow manages to make it clear that he wants to buy me a drink.

Amazingly, we make it to the bar, where obscene quantities of alcohol are pumped across the counter and into the thirstily waiting crowd. Refreshed and re-energized, I make my way through the jungle of flesh that sprawls across the floor to the stage. Suddenly, the extraordinarily brilliant idea flashes through my brain that I should actually get up on stage and be frighteningly exhibitionistic, so I battle my way over to the stage and use one of the bouncer's legs to haul myself up. The spotlight finds me and sheer physical frenzy takes over. Any conscious thought is sequestered in some distant corner in the back of my brain, and I fall prey, along with everyone else in the place, to the booming base line.

Some time later, the lights flicker and the DJ thanks everybody for coming. This is my cue to stumble off the stage in a daze and fall into the arms of a group of dark-eyed Latin types who want to whisk me off to some fabled after-hours party. Somehow sanity reasserts itself and I reel towards the exit, hoping to make it home and into my bed before getting totally swept off in the Euro "scene." ❑

BAR & CLUB LISTINGS

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

GENERAL

ALLEY CAT
451-6200, 1 Boylston Place, Bos, C-6. A wild mix of twenty to thirty somethings who are encouraged to get up and dance on the bar late-night to the Top-40 DJ tracks. A serious place to start an unserious relationship or just work up a sweat at the crowded bar. The take-out pizza window in the alley outside does a booming business after last call. Cover varies, casual dress.

ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT
783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston, C-2. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

BEACON HILL PUB
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

BLACK GOOSE
617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A relaxed jazz club situated a stone's throw from the Statehouse. Sit back and enjoy superb live jazz at its best. It's casual, unassuming and you don't have to wear an "I love jazz attitude" on your sleeve. No cover. Live piano music Monday through Friday from 5-7.

EVERY MONDAY THROUGH SATURDAY
EVENINGS IN THE LOWER LOBBY

Mondays
PIANO BAR
Holiday Inn
1200 Beacon Street, Brookline, MA 277-1200

BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

CACTUS CLUB
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

CANTAB LOUNGE
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL
720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos, B-7. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

THE LITTLEST BAR
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

MARKET PLACE CAFE
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m.. "Street Magic" A cappella every Wednesday at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

MIRACLE OF SCIENCE BAR & GRILL
868-2866, 321 Mass. Ave., Camb, B-4. It is a miracle: the Cambridge Brain Trust actually does go out and have a good time, and this is where it happens. The theme is something like "Where Science Meets Beer." Where else can you go to brush up on your quantum physics and down a brewskie or nibble on some cool snacks? But don't worry, you don't have to pass an IQ test to get in. The dress is casual, the crowd is young, fun, and post-collegiate. Last call 12:45 a.m.

PROVINCE STREET PUB
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

SMALL PLANET BAR AND GRILL
536-4477, 565 Boylston Street, Bos, C-6. Eclectic multi-cultural cuisine and clientele are the draw in this recently revamped Back Bay hotspot. Very hip and friendly wait and bar staff, cool tropical decor, central Back Bay location and funky beer list make this a great place to hang out. Casual funky dress is the norm. Last call at 1 a.m.

WARREN TAVERN
241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, B-5. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals & athletes. Also claims to attract Boston's most beautiful women (?!) Local celebs don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

POP/JAZZ/ BLUES/REGGAE

BUNRATTY'S
254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston, C-2. A rock club favorite featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code.

NIGHTSTAGE
497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb, A-3. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

PARADISE ROCK CLUB
254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos, C-3. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

RATHSKELLER
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos, C-5. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

RYLE'S JAZZ CLUB
876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb, B-5. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryle's. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

SCULLERS LOUNGE
783-0811, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Camb, C-3. Renowned Jazz singers entertain here nightly. The bar is well stocked, the chairs are comfortable and the walls are paneled, evoking a mellow mood. The nighttime view of the Charles adds an air of romance. Heavy cover. Casual dress but no jeans or sneakers.

WESTERN FRONT
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multi-cultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

DANCING

AVALON
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, D-5. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

AVENUE C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, C-6. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

PIANO ROOMS

MONDAY'S PIANO BAR
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline, D-3. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

BREWERIES

COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

IRISH

BLACK ROSE
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

O'LEARY'S
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)
Maintain or, if your weekend has already started, regain your equilibrium without the Librium, get your road act together or make vacation plans before Mercury settles into housebound Cancer Tuesday night. Not a thrilling assignment, but once benevolent Jupiter turns direct Monday the good times, the hopes for a rosier future should return. Nobody benefits from this change of direction more than Bill Clinton, since it was optimistic Jupiter on his Libra ascendant that got him elected in the first place, but when Jupiter turned retrograde, shortly after the inauguration, his rising star took a dive.
A clue to what we'll remember about the Clinton Administration appears next Wednesday as Mercury trines Saturn, but it'll take a while to get with the program that will shape all governments from 2/94 through 3/96, the main transit of Saturn through Pisces. A total lunar eclipse at 14 Sagittarius, not visible on the East Coast, is set for next Friday morning. The entire weekend could be a trip. Venus enters Taurus on the 6th, so romantic and social matters will beat to a steadier pulse and we won't be as curious or as willing to put our hearts on the line.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)
Early Aries born in March may experience a reversal of fortune when generous Jupiter moves forward again. Look to a partner or lawyer to improve your chances for success. Personal desires are mixed up with issues of public acceptance, artistic inspiration and freedom, nothing you can control or, for that matter, understand fully. But a few more days of feeling weird and you'll be fine. Because Venus is in your sign until the 6th, your look and the people who are attracted by it matter a lot.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)
While your confusion might not be obvious to others, it's making you a bit nuts. A long relaxing weekend could cure relationship jitters better than booze and drugs would, plus there'll be constructive, maybe even cheery words about work when you return. The additional responsibility/authority you've assumed may lead to talk about money, but talk is cheap and, thanks to the lunar eclipse, your expenses loom large, like that mountain made out of a molehill.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)
Happy birthday. Your present, if you choose to accept it, can be a major addition to the house, something big, beautiful and très expensive. But if it's not yet your birthday, then your folks might benefit from Jupiter's surge upward and onward instead. Never fear, a significant gift is on its way. The facts that arrive as your Mercury ruler slips into Cancer midweek bolster your position and earn you more respect and responsibility, but probably no bucks for now. Keep an eye on your sweetie during the eclipse; s/he may disappear.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)
That woman (the bitch goddess Success?) is still making waves, upsetting relationships and causing your partner justifiable worry. During a langorous Memorial Day weekend, outside influences wane and you see your way more clearly. Having Mercury in your sign helps you organize thoughts and words as well as your itinerary. Mercury is in Cancer from 6/1-8/9, retrograde from 7/1-7/25, time enough to write a song, but not the Great American Novel. Factor these dates into your travel plans.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)
Success should come fairly soon once Jupiter turns direct after four months of retrograde disappointment and delay. But don't push for payment or spend what is not yet in hand just because the turnaround on Monday kicks off a wave of enthusiasm. Excitement builds as the lunar eclipse nears, yet the encouraging words you hear might not jibe with the bottom line. Saturn turning retrograde in your partnership house makes your public less demanding, your opposition and your mate less formidable.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)
Bright, beautiful and brittle. Personal relationships are subject to unexpected shock waves which will subside if you both try to keep the peace over the holiday weekend. But if you don't, go for a breakthrough instead of a breakup. Constructive dialogs about maintaining good health and official info about employment midweek, and there's nothing you can do to screw this up. Unless, of course, you let the crazy full moon eclipse send you off into the wild blue yonder into business for yourself.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)
Other signs seem to recover when their illusions are shattered, why can't you? This romantic, idealistic vision of yours, your version of progress through harmony is being challenged. What to do: take your Aquarians and run for the hills, create a idyllic weekend for yourselves in a sylvan setting? A Libra moon insures that this social experiment will be a success in your book, no matter what happens, and Jupiter turning direct in Libra can provide intelligible signs (a bit of good luck) that you're on the right track.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)
Most Scorpions feel Jupiter's change of direction in your social sphere. Good friends bestow good things again - trips, financial opportunities, books that'll change your head. For some, it's the political arena that'll offer the plums ripe for plucking. The rest might not notice that guardian angels and spirit guides are showing up in dreams and meditations again and that they are nudging you back on the path you were so enthusiastically trodding when 1993 began. Finances matter very much during the lunar eclipse; pay more attention.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22- DECEMBER 21)
More celebrations. Jupiter, our beloved, benign ruling planet, turns direct Monday night at the top of our solar charts. Will careers bloom, reputations blossom again? Will we be our lucky old selves, stepping in shit as we blithely follow the rainbow? If I say "yes" and you say "yes," we'll have a done deal. The lunar eclipse at 14 Sag polarizes personal relationships - what you want can be cancelled out by what your partner demands. Adjustments, however, should come fairly easily if you talk.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)
Younger is better or so it'll seem when Mercury trines your Saturn ruler midweek. Listening to the latest tips from teens can be a money maker Saturn sits in your money house, but it's not something you can quickly process into profit. It'll take time, emotional rapport and a better diet before you realize the rewards of this association. Jupiter turning direct at the top of your solar chart brings back an opportunity that slipped out of your hand when it went retrograde in late January.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)
Getting through the long weekend could be tricky because normally loving Venus is sending off/on signals to your Uranus ruler. Patience, if possible, is the key to a peaceful Memorial Day, but if not, then enjoy the adventure, the weird eroticism and strange trip you're taken on. It will be memorable. Jupiter brings an enlightened attitude about and money from investments and other joint ventures. Maybe not now, probably in September when lucky Jupiter and your Uranus ruler make contact. Plan accordingly.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)
Don't get distracted by a schizy Mercury in Gemini, showing you two sides to every story this weekend; by Tuesday it'll be gone. Concentrate, instead on your partnership and the rosy future you see before you. Optimistic Jupiter in Libra brings more happiness to relationships and greater luck with joint assets. The upcoming lunar eclipse can make you more nervous, more emotional, so remember that, when it's a matter of self preservation, it's better to be a cold fish than a loose cannon.

Angel & Sunshine,
Here's to the summer! A time for philanderin', manhandlin', & suntannin'!
Lover
XOXO

D.P.
You're an asshole and you have a tiny dick!

Kelley,
Can you believe this guy?
JC

The 2-Can Man,
Well I must say you've come a long way, a true booze hound! Can't wait for the wedding. You and me and N.Y.City. Well, you've lost two years because you were a complete ass and let me tell you they were my peak years! Shit or get off the pot! I have a deadline! Do you know what time it is?
Ms. J.J. Folly

Tom,
You are slime. You know why. Next time you sweep someone off their feet, be prepared to fly, because falling off a 10-story building sucks. Maybe you'll learn something now!!
Peace!
MJN

Ross,
Every time I close my eyes, I have only one wish in mind – you would disappear. I so strongly dislike you, it's kind of funny.
Stef.

Hey Lanya,
Loser! Nicole and I have been waiting to hear from you too long. When you get a minute give you old roomies a call.
Isabel

Peter W.,
You are a lazy, chicken-hearted slimedog from Hell! By the way, you'll never make it past your freshman year. See ya, slob.
Brian J.

To Kyle, Mark, & Chris,
HA HA HA!!!
Luv,
Liz

Tom and Vetchel,
For a couple of "manly men," you're real shiners and complainers. Being court officers is inside work and there's no heavy lifting, so quit your complaining and start putting in a full day instead of ducking out early.
The Boys in Blue

The guy on the Rollerblades,
You were obnoxious, loud, and two-bag ugly. Here's your stinkin' impersonal.
The Blonde Chic

Dearest Larry,
I'm sorry. I just can't take it any more. Whenever I hear you stagger past the bedroom door on a hot Allston evening, I simply lose control. I dream of pressing my moustache-clad nose softly into your sweaty Chamburgesque armpit as you gently undo my pretentious wish-I-was-a-yuppie ponytail. Quite frankly, you are to die for. My guru agrees.
Your handsome Himalayan guide, Brad.

Dear Elaine,
The time we spend together has made me realize that I care for you a lot more than friends. I also know that you are bored with him and want to be with me just as badly as I want you. Why the cowardice? Isn't loove a noble enough reason? You know that we would have an incredible, passioante and fulfilling relatioship together. It's your call, but let me remind you of one thing: the clock is ticking, and time stops for no one.
L'amour, Benjamin

M.I.A. 4/9/93
Jack H. & Karen R.
Where did they go, overnight bags in hand? Inquiring minds want to know!! Looks like a real working relatioship, K.R. – how much do you charge? "The Don" believes in team work (but he means during busimess hours!).

To all of you Franklin and Marshall assholes (especially DC), who only cared enough to listen to one side of the story – @%#$* YOU!
T.O.W.

Ding Dong, Cheers is DEAD!
Can anyone else say "Overhyped?" We thought you could.
Disgruntled Once-a-Fan

Patty,
What time is it? Where is the Kit Clark ticket? Go to Glass Madic & get it. Don't bother me, I can't leave this desk for one minute, I have five cars and only two slips. Hello! Hello! Why don't you just go home!
Snydley Whiplash

Helloooo Kingpin!
You're the bloke with the mostest. Know what I'm saying? The absolute dopest. Tell you somethin', you don't already know? Love you, love you, love you from from lid to soul. You do have it happenin', you got it goin' on looong past the break of dawn. And you don't stop. Always quick to put me back on track if I get out of whack with a royal sugarsmack!

Happy New Year, Easter Bunny. Always will believe in you. You've got my total faith in everything you do. Love you very, very much,
Your "sweetie" (yikes!) H.

Joby,
I know you're reading this.
Mike

Sheila,
Wake up, ma, I love you but you have to remember who really wears the bra in our house. Take them away from her, she's never home, besides, her boobs aren't that big. Mine have better curves then her poor excuse for development. I bet you thought you had only one daughter. Think again.
Love, your "pretty" son,
David

You were the guy at the April 30 show at Brandeis U. You had green hair, a pierced eyebrow and I believe you had a nosering. You were the guy in the mosh, weaqring a green long-sleeved shirt. I was the girl with the short blond hair. I had on plaid pants, a white shirt with a black Bosstones t-shirt over it. I wore black boots.
You gave me the lift up, after stagediving failed. You helped me up after I fell. This was during Dogzilla set. You reminded me of someone I usd to know. Someone I really liked, actually. I haven't seen him for quite a longwhile.
Media.
I thought for a second that you were him. Forgive me if I stared too much, that's the reason...I thought you were really cool, and I wish I could have found words or strength to talk to you...
I don't even know your name...Goodbye.

Paul,
What makes you think the accident was my fault? Considering the stupidity of your manuver, I should have sped up so that I could more damage than hit your fender. It's a good thing there were witnesses to your idiocy, because what you did was so asinine that nobody would believe me otherwise.
Mike

Deb,
Even LeeAnn thinks I'm in love with you. Imagine that.

Bingeing On Bargains In Bins

Before school begins, this place is packed with mothers, their children and their feet, looking for (among many other things), running shoes, cleats, work boots, roller blades, plastic jellies and those touchingly plain canvas things we used to call sneakers. On an ordinary weekday, it is also merrily crowded with people stalking the wild deal. The stock here includes brand-name clothes (they can't be named, but they are the big and nudging-bigness names one is usually paying vastly too much for) that may be over-stocks, close-outs and, occasionally, the mildly-used. Pricing is done in an amusing way; a 10-letter word signifying one of the name brands you'll find here is written on the wall, with each letter of the word corresponding to a number from One to Zero. On the item there will be written two letters, from which you derive the often-shockingly low price of the item. This skinflint, whose last pair of running shoes seemed miraculous at $25 found the same shoes here for $12. Footwear includes sports, dress, casual and athletic shoes. Under $40 is the norm, often going as low as $5. Filling the bins of the hodgepodge here are sweats, socks, some baby clothes (those zip-up 'All-Over Suits') and raucously declarative sweat shirts, also some college ones. Brightly-colored high heels are probably the dressiest items here. The stock changes, is of course random and unpredictable in terms of size, but what a little bit you have to gamble to hit the jackpot. Open Tues.-Sat. 9 a.m.-3:30 p.m.

Society Of Arts And Crafts; Garden And Ocean, One Flight Up

Cooling relief from urban scorch can be found in the evocations of gardens and gardening (hold the actual nature) upstairs at the Society Of Arts And Crafts. Using a variety of media, these artists have brought together the whimsical and artistic with the practical. Katherine Pearson has, in a sort of pun of materials, made a bubbling fountain full of large stoneware "stones, set inside a pleasingly rounded bluey-black container; the "music" of the water can be changed by rearranging the stones ($525). Decorative recyclings of brightly-colored shovels, rakes and garden parts have become what Laura Utley calls "Yardbirds." Roxanne Lorey has used a built-in gardening self-reference by making large painted clay watering cans into – if not actual irrigators – decorative planters. Overhead fly Karen Rossi's outdoor tin sculptures; one is a golden-haired mermaid who has glopped and shopped a feast of lipstick and jewelry. Bill Heise's wittily flattened dark beasts include a tall metal impala. A fascinating indoors-only bench by Robert Mack displays asymmetry at every point, a study in pleasing lopsidedness. Across the hall from these pieces are seaside gardening pieces, including Eric O'Leary's table-that-could-be-a-seat (it's indented.) Michelle Van Slyke's large weather vane has a cat intersecting tantalizingly with a mouse; it's madly colorful and deliciously smooth, made of melted glass on steel. And theatrically suggestive are David Kiernan's Japanese Harmony Lanterns, in which the mere heat of a lightbulb causes a decorated paper inside a round lamp to swirl, casting pictures of fish, a mystery dream of the sea. A landlocked walk-up in summer could get a lift – so could a sea-theme party – from these salty visual riffs.

Garden Treasures II / The Society Of Arts and Crafts / 175 Newbury Street / (through July 3) / and 101 Arch Street / enter at 34 Summer St. (through July 30)

Condemned To Repeat It – Or Recover

Customarily, it is the victim of abuse who writes about her (or his) experience, so this book is surprisingly different. A man, chastened and cleansed in the fire of the suffering he has caused, and the suffering he has endured from his own father, has written the boldly-titled book: Confessions of An Abusive Husband. Robert Robertson describes, from the inside of both sides of abuse (the getting and the subsequent giving) how irrational and costly abuse is, sundering families, self-esteem, and human connection. After reading about how his father whipped him, to the point of producing welts, when he was 'teaching' the then-baby Robertson to walk, it doesn't seem too surprising that Robertson grew up to become a berating, explosive husband himself later on. Nor that what he describes as 12-years of hell, with himself as the guiltier party, ending in divorce. A worried baby picture and another post-roughing-up picture, with Robertson in an askew jacket, his terrified arms held stiffly at his sides, are sadly apt illustrations. He coins the term Emotionally Repressed Male (or ERM) for men who, while bursting with unresolved pain and shame, become abusers and batterers, and offers his own 12-Step Program to help them resolve their past feelings and change their present behavior. Both klieg-lit with anti-denial intensity and yet gentle in tone, the book names the fierce facts: abusers are self-centered, threatening, scornful, controlling, deceitful, addictive and, of course, have short tempers. Their arms may be full of the Mea Culpa Roses of Reconciliation, but they have short memories for the patterns that are horribly predictably, soon to happen again. Robertson deals with the forgiveness necessary to settle the past, and, along with help for the internal process of healing, also gives very concrete advice for dealing with ones' spouse, and handling ones' anger in the ongoing present where the dangers of relapse need to be vigilantly monitored. That Robertson made major changes is inspiring testimony that others can, too. One copy, mail order, is $10.95 plus $2.50 postage; 2-5 copies are $10 each plus $3.00 postage per order. Six or more copies are $9 each, no postage.

6 In The Lyons Den

Patrick Lyons rules Lansdowne Street with a velvet, claws-sheathed paw. He and his organization, the Lyons Groups, entertain you every night you're at the Alley Cat, M80, Stitches, Avalon and many, many other clubs. Who is this man who would rule your social life?

25 Where the Fig-were-we?

The calm, sweet island of Nantucket is annually transformed, on Memorial weekend, to a place of civilized chaos in the form of the Figawi sailboat race. Controlled debauchery, tasteful craziness and general feelings of sun-blessed goodwill make this a weekend not soon for-got (or recovered from). Lauren Dare takes a red-eyed look back..

The Issue at Hand

Mim Michelove

It seems that I am going to have to exceed my one-column-per-year quota due to a few recent jibes taken by the cantankerous twist-and-tell gossip twins at the Herald.

Their column condemns I.B. writer Mopsy Strange Kennedy for writing a piece about Super Socks in Kenmore Square, of which I.B. Food Editor Peter McNamara is a part owner. Seems kinda suspicious though; the Phoenix and Globe thought enough of the store to each do a piece on it. Maybe the Herald was just too busy digging up "dirt."

Yep, Gail and Laura, you caught us red-handed, fingers in the cookie jar. The Columbia Journalism Review may have to overlook the Improper's foiled attempts at a Pulitzer. But life's full of disappointments. While on the lesson of proper journalism, tabloid queens: Biba has not signed the deal to go into Pastavino's location, yet. Check your sources before, or did you not have enough material to fill Thursday's column?

On the other side of things, this issue marks further change in the makeup of the Improper. We now welcome a few new names to our growing masthead: Music scribe, Paul Robicheau who will be writing a column entitled the "Sound View" and Sharyn Fireman, shopping maven extraordinaire, who will be riding the bargain circuit in search of Boston's Best Buys for her new column. Additionally, take a peek at the writing of a "daring" woman imbibing and scribing her way through Memorial Day Weekend's Figawi boat race to become the Hunter S. Thompson of the 20-something gen. Lauren Dare takes a raucous romp through the bars and boats of Nantucket to bring this vodka-tonic inspired excuse for missing the race.

So read on, and watch out for the cheap shots.

DUSTY RHODES

Boston's Main Event

BY NICOLE L. MILLS

On the wall behind her desk is a framed quote that says "The world is not interested in the storms you encountered...but did you bring in the ship?" Dusty (it's a nickname left over from her tomboy childhood) Rhodes, the president of Conventures, the biggest special event planning firm in New England, brought in the ships all right. Last summer, as the director of Sail Boston '92, she brought tall ships from around the world, hordes of tourists, international recognition, and millions of dollars to Massachusetts.

When asked how she pulled off "the biggest event in New England history," she replies, "With a lot of patience, a lot of diplomacy, and a great sense of humor." She uses sports analogies frequently to describe her command strategy: "[My business] is run like a pro-football team. Pro football has been much more instrumental in my business strategy than anything else, because in football, it's a business, and it's based on only one thing, and that's winning. Week to week and season to season, you either win enough games, or you're fired...and so that's sort of the strategy around here, and has been from day one."

Sail Boston was not only a huge financial success (it generated over half a billion dollars in revenues) but set a precedent for future endeavors by proving that Boston could pull off an event of this magnitude. Making an event that size run so smoothly goes a long way towards convincing people that Massachusetts is a great place to hold events and festivals, and Dusty has almost single-handedly put tourism on the state agenda.

"Tourism is the industry of the future, and one that everyone can grow. You can't grow the bio-technology field in Massachusetts, but we can bring tourism here."

For new projects, Dusty has teamed up with veteran concert promoter Don Law to plan festivals for 1993 and 1994. "As far as the Don Law connection, it's kind of strange, he's been in business twenty-five years in New England," she says. "We've been in business 17-going-on-18 years, and we'd never met...but there was an instant business 'click.' We saw a great future in public festivals."

Some of their upcoming events include the Boston Shootout showcasing outstanding high school basketball players, and the American Bar-B-Q Boston Round-Up. What are the similarities between promoting a concert and doing a special event?

"They're both a logistics nightmare!" she laughs. "Both our staffs laugh at us because it's like, 'I don't care if you're tired, I don't care if it's four o'clock in the morning, let's go.' That's what the plan was, and we're doing it!"

SARA EDWARDS

T.V. Diva

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

Sara Edwards is part actress and part stunt woman. On any given day, she can be seen square dancing, fire walking, skydiving, or yes, even sumo wrestling across your television screen. For years, Boston has watched as she's introduced us to quirky characters and kept us abreast of the latest trends. "I don't quite understand my job," Edwards says, as she shrugs her shoulders and lifts one eyebrow inquisitively. "I just go with the flow...I get paid to be a good sport."

Edwards has the chameleon-like resilience and the adventuresome spirit it takes to be the lifestyles reporter for WHDH-TV, Channel 7. She is a self-proclaimed ham and curiosity-seeker, and it is hard to imagine her ever being the "gawky, shy" adolescent she says she was.

"I like going out and doing stories where I can participate," she says, her hands gesticulating with every word she utters. "Then the viewers can vicariously come along."

On certain days, Edwards does admit to feeling more than her share of sensory overload. "I do some of the weirdest stuff," she says, as her voice rises. "One day it's the Boston Pops...and the next day I'm walking on hot coals. I've learned," she adds, "to be open minded."

Edwards exudes enthusiasm and energy. She seems to thrive on the spontaneous and frenetic lifestyle of a reporter. And though she is a "high-energy" person, she is far from being anything like skittish.

Quite the contrary; she has found the delicate balance between earthy and eccentric. "I could be very cool and sound like I've just taken EST courses and meditated," she says as she critiques her on-air personality, "But that's not me."

Edwards thoroughly enjoys what she does, but it's the long-form interview that she wishes to explore more in-depth. "All I have time for now are cute little five-second sound bytes," she says slightly exasperated. "There are times when I wish I had more time to talk...to find out what makes people tick."

She stops a moment and reminisces about past interviews she found exceptionally gratifying. "I mean, when you interview people and you get to that moment where you break through...you connect...it really is special." ❑

IN THE LYONS DEN

By Korina Kontogianni and Nicole L. Mills

With Help From J.D. Tuccille and Chad Sanborn

The heat pours off every sweaty body within twenty feet, the bass pumping a beat so hard and so furious that the room seems to move with every pulse. It's dark, it's humid, it's fantastic. Off to the side, patrons stand, staring at the action, drinking, screaming to be heard into each other's ears. The flirting is hard and heavy. It's a Saturday night at Venus di Milo, in the heart of Lansdowne Street, and the crowd is going nuts.

Off on a balcony, a discerning pair of eyes soaks in the scene, processing and dissecting the nuances of the cavorting masses below. Sycophants approach him: "How's it going, Patrick, how's business?" He smiles politely with his Kennedyesque jaw and piercing stare, makes small talk, looks away impatiently. Adrenalized and ready to move, he glides off with one word to a young, attractive blond clinging to his arm. They're interrupted numerous times by hangers-on and wannabe FOP's (Friends Of Patrick) on their way out.

Boston is a city notorious for early closing hours, contentious neighborhood activists and a communal suspicion towards passing trends. A city where liquor licenses are rationed like war-era sugar by officials who were nursed on the twin teats of Puritanism and Irish Catholic Guilt. Yet it is in this very city that Patrick Lyons and his Lyons Group Management Company have created an unrivaled entertainment dynasty, whose roster of establishments is almost as long and impressive as the lines to get in them.

You can't spill a drink in this city, without hitting one of the Lyons' dens, which are always on the rising tide of the public's demand for hot, hip, night-time entertainment. The current roster includes all the obvious names in Boston bar-hopping.

Avalon, Axis, Bill's Bar and Venus di Milo on Lansdowne Street. M80 and Paradise on Commonwealth Avenue. Zanzibar, Avenue C, the Sweetwater Cafe, Sticky Mike's and the Alley Cat Lounge in the Boylston Place alley. Stitches and Universal Joint on Beacon Street. Quest in the Fenway. And, as if all these weren't enough, Lyons is also rumored to be a silent partner in Boston's Hard Rock Cafe, House of Blues in Cambridge and Marais/Esmé in the Theater District.

When it comes to the world inhabited by denizens of the dark, Lyons is native smart. As one of the stories swirling around him has it, Patrick Lyons single-handedly created Boston's nightlife in six days, and on the seventh, he remodeled. What accounts for his uncanny ability to read the social scene and predict the rise and demise of trends?

His newest venue is a club based on author Douglas Coupland's "Generation X" concept. Targeting the twenty-something generation and keying into this generational vibe – a distaste for low-pay, dead-end McJobs, contrived music, and all things baby boomerish – Lyons struck pay dirt again. Marketers have just come to understand the collective economic clout of the 46 million members of this X generation, the second largest group of young adults in US history, and as usual, Lyons has a jump on the competition.

If Lyons seems pleased with the club (located inside Quest on Thursday nights), he has reason to be so. With its labyrinthine dark, narrow corridors and multiple levels, Gen X is succeeding with the channel-surfing-as-a-way-of-life crowd. The place pulses with hip-hop life, its different levels offering the easily-bored with options, options, options. It's designed, as all his clubs, with great attention to detail, not unlike the way master of fantasy worlds, Walt Disney, might have done it if he were into nightclubs.

Lyons has been characterized as a wunderkind and a seer in a business not customarily known for grand creative foresight. "People tend to credit Lyons with almost supernatural instincts for knowing how to attract spendthrift sybarites at play," Boston Globe columnist John Robinson notes. Lyons' tastes are diverse, refined by his penchant for world travel and the good life.

Lyons is known to move about as often as possible, jetting off for a Martha's Vineyard restaurant opening, or for an idea-generating jaunt in middle Europe. He golfs, and spends times with charity organizations. He dines out in Boston's trendiest: Olive's, Jae's Cafe, Biba. There's always a new and beautiful woman on his arm. Not bad for a kid from Buffalo.

Patrick Lyons got his start in the blink-and-you'll-miss-it night club business where he grew up in upstate New York. The former altar boy (Lyons was raised, along with his four brothers, by his mother alone – his father left the family when he was a child) opted out of the college route and landed a bartending job at a bar owned by Cincinnati-based Avents Corp. Avents allowed him to cut his management teeth in several cities, Detroit, Minneapolis and eventually Nantasket Beach.

In 1977, he was hired away by a competitor, Beta Corporation, to manage their disco clubs New York-New York in New York City and eventually Boston-Boston (presently Avalon) here. Paying his dues in the late-1970s New York glam nightclub scene and exposed to the likes of Studio 54's Steve Rubell and a host of imitators, Lyons learned the ins and outs of the business.

Then, in Boston, Lyons orchestrated the sale of Boston-Boston from his new boss to his old employer, and took over as manager. By 1980, he was the regional manager of four clubs. When the whole nightclub chain came up for sale, Lyons was ready to make his move on the Boston locations.

Understanding the importance of relating the hype and glitz of nightclubs to the bottom line, Lyons carefully forged a partnership with CPA Ed Sparks. Sparks, through solid financials stemming from his big eight corporate background, was able to attract an impressive group of investors which include the rock promoter Don Law, George Lewis of the swank eatery 29 Newbury and adventurer Richard Wilson. Quite a roster, and quite a reflection on the man. As Sparks said in an earlier interview, "We weren't investing in a nightclub. We were investing in Patrick."

The rest is golden history, with the popularity of the Lyons Group clubs attested to by the throngs of libidinous patrons waiting to get in to Avalon or M80 or Zanzibar on any given weekend night. Diversity pulls at the masses; there's a Lyons club for practically everyone. To further the variety of options, Lyons now rotates nights at the clubs. On one night a club caters to the flashy, Euro crowd; the next, you may find a gay target audience.

Each club has a carefully-chosen personality, and a coinciding marketing focus. Like Avalon, with its disco-gone-nineties feeling. Or Sweetwater Cafe, with its rough-floored Southwestern charm. Or even Axis, with more body parts pierced per inch than you'll find anywhere else in Beantown.

Though Lyons is elusive when the talk of revenue figures arises, he does state that he wishes the Lyons Group were one-tenth as successful as some people think. "If we are not profitable, we don't have an organization," Lyons says flatly. "[But] there is a popular misconception about the money we are making – the reality is different."

While the actual balance sheets remain shrouded in rumor and gossip, some estimates have placed his empire's worth in the thirty million dollar range. The highest percentage is derived from the bar, followed by admission/door revenues, memberships and the hosting of corporate events.

You could say that the sun never rises on the Lyons empire. But suggest that Patrick Lyons is the man who controls Boston's nightlife, and you'll get an earful. "People are misinformed if they believe that," Lyons bristles. "There are 700 licenses in Boston. We operate a dozen of them. That is not what I call control."

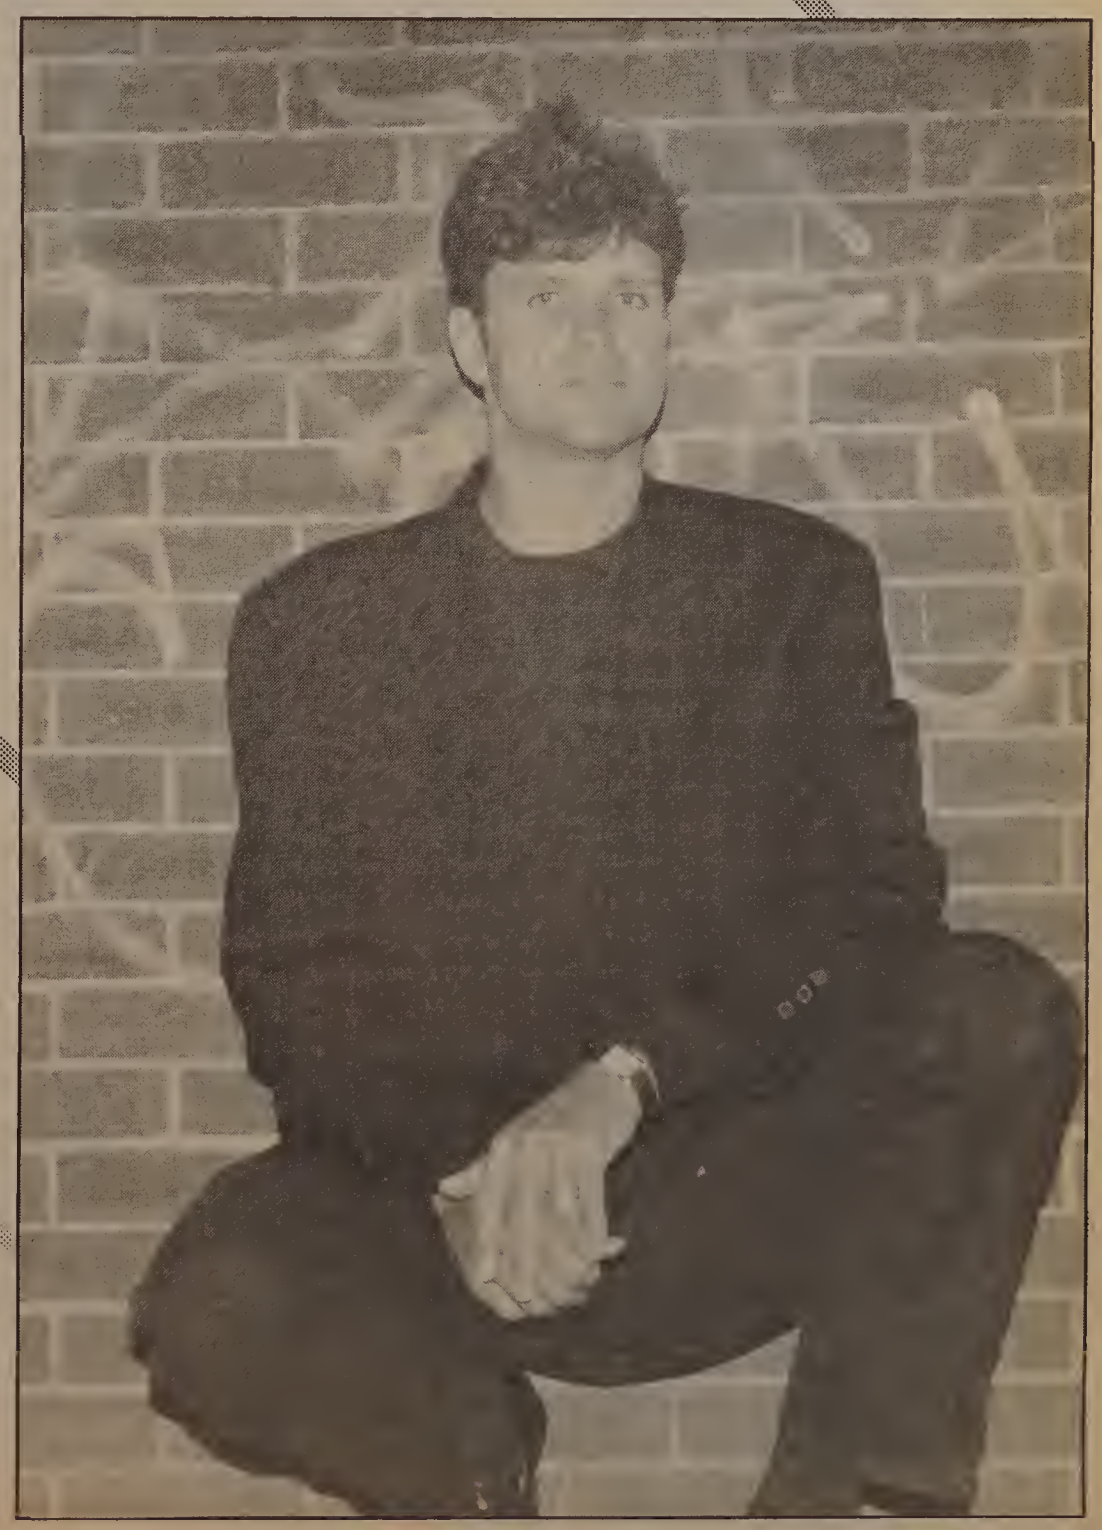
"Ten years ago," he adds, "when we started, there were three nightclubs in town. We had one of them....As far as I'm concerned, bring [on] all the nightclubs, restaurants, social situations. It doesn't hurt us. People gain from competition, more options; everyone wins."

With the nightclub industry in general characterized by shoebox accounting and a lack of effective management, it's easy to see why Lyons is so successful. More than his innate ability to smell out the coming thing before it hits, it's Lyons' ability to focus on the bottom line that makes his organization tick. That, and a business philosophy that would do management guru Tom Peters proud. Case in point: Patrick is always quick to deflect praise and compliments away from himself, onto the people in his organization.

"Part of today's success is getting the right people from the start," he says. "[The members of our group] are all nice guys, and successful business people themselves."

His managers are said to be tied into an elaborate bonus and incentive system, and are given a heavy level of autonomy and independence. It is not uncommon to find people in their young twenties managing clubs for Lyons. And his staff is surprisingly well-educated, clean-cut and capable, an uncommon denominator in the club business.

His corporation is also known for an uncommon level of community involvement and interaction. "This is a corporate understanding, that we have to...give back [to the community]," Lyons explains. "It's a way of doing business.



The Lyons clubs (especially Avalon) are some of the hottest spots to host a charity fund-raiser these days. Boston, home of the conservative venture, has few venues that offer as flashy or as hip a place to host benefits. Since many established Boston charities are in need of fresh, younger blood (both in terms of membership and in terms of donors), a cutting-edge location appeals.

"We have not just decided to do that because it's the 90s, we were here since 1978. We have our differences of opinions [with the community], but that's fine too. It is a controversial business we operate in. You have to mix the needs of the neighborhood, your guests, the regulatory agencies and your profitability as a company. Multiply that out with a number of places we have," he adds, "and it becomes very complicated."

Even with all his successes, Lyons still has his share of frustrations and disappointments. "I get disgusted sometimes with certain sections of people that have opinions that are opposed to entertainment. New conservatism," he says heatedly, "is a dam of bullshit.

"I'm sure the people that think this way never did other things. As soon as they got out of the monastery," he sarcastically adds, "they moved right in their little jobs and their neighborhood."

So what's next for the club czar? In the wake of the caffeine-fueled Seattle scene, and with the decline of alcohol consumption, Lyons' next project might be coffee houses. Since a recent trip to Czechoslovakia, he's been talking about a real "Kafka and Mozart" coffee house, with the "real flavor [based on] the people who originally hung out in coffee houses." Keep your eyes peeled.

Kevin Meany Returns to Town

". . .He walks onto the stage as ball of energy, singing, dancing and poking his eyes out. . ."

Told by the oracle of Apollo that their child was destined to grow up to kill his father and marry his mother, the parents of Oedipus left the infant alone on a hilltop to be killed by the elements. However, a shepherd discovered the baby and adopted it. When Oedipus learned of the prophecy, he fled his home to be to far away from who he thought were his parents, in order to avert his destiny.

Along the way he unknowingly killed his natural father, the king of Thebes, and assumed the throne of the city by marrying the queen, his natural mother. When he realized that he had indeed murdered his father and married his mother, Oedipus blinded himself and fled Thebes, where he had committed his crimes against man, nature and the gods.

Kevin Meaney's relationship with his mother is not as close as Oedipus,' but they talk often. She's also a major part of his comedy routine. From poking his eye out to wearing big pants, his comedy mother comprises a large portion of Meaney's act. But, according to the comedian, his real life mother is much different. The mother on stage is a character he developed while living in Boston, where he began his comedy career. "She knows it's not her," Meaney explains. "It's a little bit of my mother, and a little bit of my mother if she raised us in Boston."

Meaney's ties to the city are almost as strong as if he grew up in Boston. He developed not only characters but also his entire brand of comedy during his tenure here during the early eighties. That was during the height of Boston's comedy empire, back when the Boston comedians were among the larger stars on the American comedy scene, and had the ability to control the quality of the talent in the city. "It was like Al Capone was running the town," Meaney jests. "I was let in because I was Irish Catholic; I lucked out."

He recalls another of his trademark routines, his "Man on the Street" interviews which involve not only the club audiences, but at times rigging a monitor in the club and leaving the premises to speak with people on the streets outside. "I used to do that in Boston," he reminisces. "Every Wednesday night I'd take the camera out on Comm. Ave., and I would stop traffic. A cop once actually handcuffed me to the meter and left me there, and the audience left. I had to finish the show outside handcuffed. The cop thought it was really funny."

Meaney's comedy is difficult to define. Like his influences, Jonathan Winters and Steve Martin, his jokes are the highlight of his act. Meaney's humor comes from his performance. He walks onto stage as a ball of energy, singing, dancing, and poking his eyes out, keeping the momentum until he finishes the act with his now-famous impersonation of the entire chorus of singers in "We Are the World."

"I did it the first night [the song] came out and I got an unbelievable reaction. It just grew from there," boasts Meaney. The upshot is, while his material is great, it's really his energy and personality that are the highlights of his talent.

Since his performance relies so strongly upon his hyperactivity, Meaney's preparation for shows is essential. So how does he ready himself to go out on stage and give an audience his all? "Well, I travel with a crack pipe," he jokes. Because after all, joking is what Kevin Meaney does best. ❑

As do so many bio pics, Dragon promotes the legend more than it portrays the man, and it keeps up a rushed "and then he...and then he...." pace, as music swells to let you know something important is happening. Jason Scott Lee as Bruce Lee (no relation) is a charmer. The kung fu fights are flashy, if bloody, set pieces which propel the story. Above all, the movie is an exposé on racism: Lee watches Mickey Rooney play a buck-toothed Oriental buffoon in Breakfast at Tiffany's; he promotes the idea for the successful TV. series, Kung Fu, but loses the lead to a Caucasian; Chinese martial arts masters condemn Lee for teaching whites. Ironically, Bruce Lee comes across as an all-American hero. K. WILSON

Ivan Reitman's Capra-esque comedy gleefully sticks it to the Republicans. Kevin Kline is a delight as Dave Kovic, an exuberant,-generous, small-town guy who so resembles the President (a mean, tight-assed Yalie) that he becomes his full-time stand-in. Dave's agenda – giving people in need top priority – pits him against Bob, his reptilian Chief of Staff (the wonderful Frank Langella) and allies him with the estranged First Lady (Sigourney Weaver). Like its hero, the film is high-spirited, but it loses its edge and becomes cloying whenever more than one "nice" person is on the screen at a time. Dave is to the Fourth Estate and the Beltway what The Player is to Hollywood.. K. WILSON

Twenty-four-year-old director Robert Rodriguez made this action picture for $7,000, and it's great fun. A young mariachi singer (co-writer Carlos Gallardo) gets caught in the middle of a deadly feud between a vicious drug lord (Moco who always wears white) and his partner Azul (who always wears black, even though his name means "blue"). The movie opens with a cleverly edited prison ambush sequence and speeds towards its Road Warrior-like conclusion. Rodriguez gets good comic mileage out of inanimate objects such as portable phone and beer bottles, and he even paves the way for a sequel. The amateur cast is surprisingly good. In Spanish. K. WILSON

Diana (Demi Moore) and David Murphy (Woody Harrelson) are deeply in love (they have sex and say "I love you," a lot). But they are desperate for money, so when a handsome billionaire (Robert Redford) offers them a million dollars for a night with Diana, they take him up on it and then have to pay the piper. There's no denying director Adrian Lyne's considerable talent; he keeps this insubstantial soufflé rising until the very end when it collapses into a sweet and sticky puddle. Like Pretty Woman, Indecent Proposal is a cynical paean to our consumer society disguised as a romance. So why weren't Demi's clothes as nice as Julia's? K. WILSON

Fat, raw meat, flies, and feces: all figure prominently in Jean-Claude Lauzon's Léolo. As do words, dreams, poetry, madness, and sunken treasure. A young boy from a Montreal slum calls himself Léolo (he dreams of Italy) and writes obsesslvely about himself and his grotesque family: his stupid, piggish father who's obsessed with bowel movements; his lewd grandfather who pays the young girl next girl to suck his toes; his dear, slow-witted brother whose overgrown muscles can't protect him from his own cowardice. You know things had gotten out of hand when the untimely death of Léolo's pet flies is upsetting. The film is surreal, dark, and despairing. In French. K. WILSON

Director Vincent Ward's latest film about an Innuit Eskimo (Jason Scott Lee) and the half-Indian, half-European love of his life (Anne Parillaud), who become caught up in the marvels and the horrors of the white man's world, is a clunker. Big chunks of the movie don't connect; they're like icebergs breaking off from the mainland and floating away. Ward bombards us with images: X-rays and maps appear so often that they lose their meaning; too many show-stopping aerial shots do just that: stop the show and overwhelm the viewer. But better a magnificent clunker than a mediocre "success" any day. K. WILSON

The comparison with Boyz N the Hood is inevitable, except that Boyz gives you reason to hope; Menace doesn't. Twenty-year-old directors Allen and Albert Hughes show how one generation passes on to the next a legacy of violent, destructive behavior, emotional numbness, and hopelessness. Caine (Tyrin Turner) is an LA gang member. The son of drug addicts, he saw his father shoot a man to death at home. His friends and family offer him some ways out, but try as he may he can't escape the cycle of violence. The Hughes brothers are talented, and you can see them experimenting and borrowing. Sometimes they hit, sometimes they miss, as In their brief, unsuccessful Spike Lee sex scene. K. WILSON

The opening of director Kenneth Branagh's latest film is full of fun and promise as both men and women prepare themselves for the battle of the sexes. Beatrice (Emma Thompson) and Benedict (Kenneth Branagh) are worthy adversaries, precursors to all the smart, snappy, sexy, big screen couples we love. Hero (Kate Beckinsale) and Claudio (Robert Sean Leonard) are beautiful young lovers. When the vindictive Don John (Keanu Reeves) tricks Claudio into believing his love is a wanton hussy, the battle turns ugly. Finally, all's well that ends well. The movie slows down as the director relies more and more on close-ups to tell the story.

THIS BOY'S LIFE

Michael Caton-Jones' film of Tobias Wolff's autobiography presents a triumph of the human spirit. Toby, a young teenager (Leonardo DiCaprio), moves all over the country with his mother (Ellen Barkin, doing her best acting in years), as she tries to escape abusive relationships and find a decent job. When her spirits flag temporarily, she marries a bullying auto mechanlc (Robert De Niro) from the remote town of Concrete. Although De Niro is convincing when he's flinging Toby against the refrigerator or brutalizing Barkin in bed, he gives a surprisingly one-note performance. However, DiCaprio's performance is simply outstanding: honest, heartfelt, and utterly without guile. A. LEIBS

A dizzying paean to a host of ace Hollywood cinematographers, from The Birth of a Nation's Billy Bitzer to Blue Velvet's Frederick Elmes. This wonderful documentary insists that it's the unheralded cameramen who often deserve the real credit for making movies soar as "art." Visions backs up its claim with scene after scene of magisterial visual splendor illustrating the signature talents of various Hollywood cameramen: among others, Lee Garmes, William Daniels, Arthur Miller, Gregg Toland, then, and Caleb Deschanel, Vilmos Zsigsmond, Nestor Almendros, Gordon Willis, now. Do these names register? Only the cinematographers really know, and appreciate each other's work.

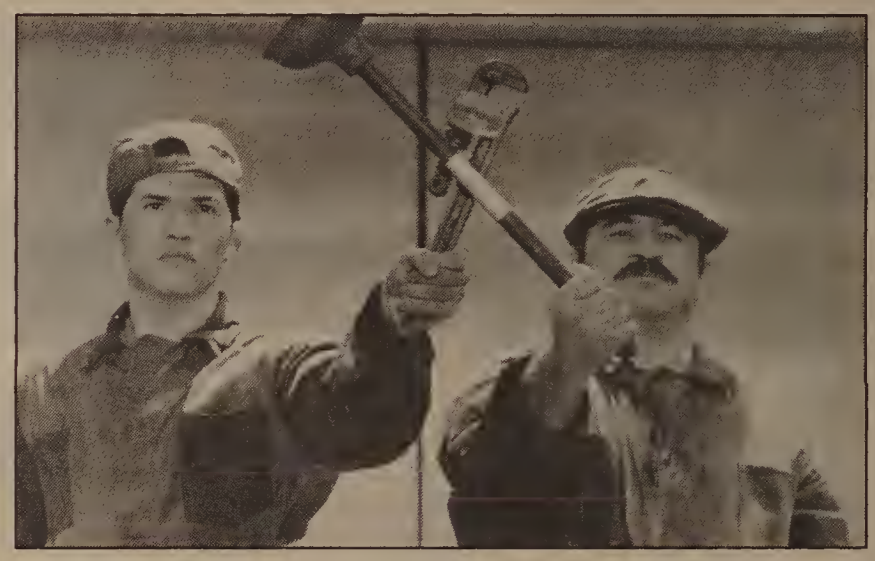
SUPER MARIO BROS.

"...Not The Glitziest Ride in the Park, But It's Fast, Jerky and Gives You Some Laughs and Thrills..."



SUPER MARIO BROS.

Directed by Rocky Morton and Annabel Jankel. Written by Parker Bennett & Terry Runté and Ed Solomon

Super Mario Bros. has the look and feel of a grade B amusement park ride – it's not the most exciting or the glitziest ride in the park, but it's fast, jerky, disorienting, and gives you some laughs and thrills.

Two Brooklyn plumbers, Mario and his younger brother Luigi, tumble into Dinohattan, a decaying city in a dying parallel world, inhabited by reptilian descendants from the dinosuars. Their mission? To rescue Daisy, a young paleontologist /princess from the clutches of the lizardly King Koopa.

The movie is based, of course, on the high-tech Nintendo video game whose heroes are decidedly low-tech. The brothers' arsenal includes plungers mounted on the wall like rifles, wrenches, and screwdrivers. Fittingly, the movie has a bright, cheesy, grungy look. Dinohattan is New York City turned upside down. Even middle-aged ladies are muggers, and sticky beige fungi hangs over everything. From a distance the city looks sinister, but beleaguered – a lonely survivor whose days are numbered.

PLUMBERS IN ARMS: Luigi (John Leguizamo) and Mario (Bob Hoskins) star in Super Mario Bros.

Super Mario Bros. is no Blade Runner or Batman, however. A dying world and urban decay are not really metaphors for anything; this is a fun-house, not film noire.

As usual, Bob Hoskins is perfect. His good guy, working stiff Mario plays well with John Leguizamo's appealing Luigi. Samantha Mathis' Daisy is smart and feisty. Also noteworthy are Yoshi, a little dinosaur, and the Goombas, Koopa's Praetorian Guard: tall, erect, dumb-as-dirt creatures with tiny reptile heads peering out of the collars of their military jackets and spikes coming out of their massive shoulders. Dennis Hopper is surprisingly tame as Koopa but then, a movie that has younger kids shrieking with laughter (during a sneak preview), first when a villain is "devolved" into a monkey and again, when Luigi compares a fungus to boogers, doesn't really have much room for Hopper's unique brand of sexual menace.

MADE IN AMERICA

Directed by Richard Benjamin. Written by Holly Goldberg Sloan.

The kids who got such a charge out of the monkey in Super Mario Bros. should enjoy Made in America. You will, too, if your idea of a good time is watching a monkey and a trained bear upstage Ted Danson, and an elephant chase bicyclist Whoopi Goldberg down the streets of San Francisco.

A brilliant, beautiful black teenager (Nia Long) discovers that her father was an anonymous sperm donor. She and her smart, independent mother (Goldberg) are horrified to learn that the sperm donor was not an accomplished black man, as the mother assumed, but a white yahoo car dealer (Danson) who's seen daily on TV, hawking his wares with the help of his four-footed friends. Mother and daughter have a few run-ins with the yahoo and – surprise, surprise – they grow to love him and vice versa.

Made in America attempts to explore the question of what is a family and what are real family values and even throws in a bit of mother/daughter rivalry for good measure. But it's superficial at best. Too much time is squandered on the animal acts, broad, not-very-funny comic routines, and sentimental scenes, all of which would play better on TV.

Made in America brings to mind other movies and suffers from the comparisons. A funny sex scene between Goldberg and Danson is a short, tepid version of an hysterical sex scene from The Tall Guy. Danson's annoying, childish girlfriend makes you long for Sara Jessica Parker's character in L.A. Story. It's a shame the movie isn't better. It's upbeat and portrays black women positively. But Made in America is an appropriate title; it's an unintentional comment on the quality of too many Hollywood movies. ❑

CELEBRATING THE BIG SCREEN

"...Unimaginable Spectacle. Lustrous Stars. Casts of Thousands...Does the Act of Film-Going Get Any More Pleasurable?..."

An ongoing series of 35 and 70 mm films at the Coolidge Corner Moviehouse, through June.

David Kleiler, programmer of Brookline's Coolidge Corner Moviehouse, never tires of describing his flagship Art Deco theater. "We have the second largest screen in the Boston area," he says. "This is the way movies are supposed to be seen: on the big, big screen." For June, Kleiler has booked the Coolidge to show off great 35 and 70 mm prints of classic studio films. Vintage Hollywood. Unimaginable spectacle. Lustrous stars. Casts of thousands.

Does the act of film-going get any more pleasurable?

You may even brave the series' commercial kick-off, a restored print of The Sound of Music, playing June 11-17. Yes, the kitsch family classic, in which the hills are alive and kicking with Julie Andrews, gooey Rodgers and Hammerstein songs, and the Trapp Family sugarplum kids. More likely, drop in on Natalie Wood's un-politically correct Puerto Rican lead in West Side Story, June 13-17, composer Leonard Bernstein's and choreographer Jerome Robbins's ever-spirited stab at kick-up-your-heels multicultural song-and-dance.

At this point, the Coolidge series really gets interesting.

June 17-20, don't miss an amazing double feature of the 1927 Sunrise and the 1978 Days of Heaven. The former, by German émigré director F.W. Murnau (Nosferatu), is among the greatest dozen films ever made. Who is not moved by this passionate tale of love lost and love redeemed?

Days of Heaven, the monumental epic set in the Texas wheat fields of 1905, is one of only two films directed by the truly legendary Terence Malick, a one-time Bostonian who mysteriously dropped out of movies. The handsome stars are Richard Gere and Sam Shepherd, the stunning cinematography by Nestor Almendros, cameraman for Francois Truffaut.

June 21-22, another formidable double bill. Orson Wells' rococo, Mexican-border, ride into mayhem and danger, Touch of Evil, combines with a rare, rare treat, The Big Combo, a hard, tough little gangster picture with genius ingenious "B" black-and-white camerawork by yet another cinematographic legend, John Alten.

If all of this isn't enough, stay tuned at the Coolidge for the 25th anniversary screening of 2001: a Space Odyssey, starting July 2.

The Story of Qiu Ju

Directed by Zhang Yimou. Written by Liu Heng. At the Brattle Theatre through June 24.

With his trio of historic dramas, Red Sorghum, Ju Dou, and Raise the Red Lantern, the Chinese, Zhang Yimou, born in 1950, has risen to the top rank of world film directors. The expectations are so high for his work that audiences and critics anticipate a masterpiece every time. And that explains the disappointment in some quarters for Zhang's newest film, The Story of Qiu Ju, a comic morality tale set in contemporary, post-Maoist China.

Qiu Ju (Gong Li) in "The Story of Qiu Ju"

Naysayers miss the formal elegance of Zhang's earlier works, plus a chance to stare into the radiant face of Zhang's wonderful actress, Gong Li, whose countenance dominated Ju Dou and Raise the Red Lantern. But Qiu Ju is shot in rough, almost documentary-style long shot. And though Gong stars as Qiu Ju, Zhang keeps his camera far, far away from her. In all cases, she is hidden under crude peasant pajama clothes, and her Qiu Ju body is twisted and deformed from a life of rural poverty. Audiences new to Gong Li will not imagine that the hard, bent creature before them is played by one of the most sensual actresses in the world.

But that's the sublimity of Gong's performance, how she completely disappears into Qiu Ju. As for Qiu Ju, here is a true people's hero. When the village mayor refuses to apologize for kicking her husband in the groin, Qiu Ju journeys into the city, to fight her way through China's Byzantine system of criminal court. Again and again, she butts against a wall of interlocking, chummy patriarchs, but never gives up. Always, she keeps her Eyes on the Prize.

Meanwhile, Zhang shows us a China never before seen in his films, his frame bursting over, ethnographically, with today's street life. Rather than a falling off, The Story of Qiu Ju reveals new facets to Zhang's inspired talent. ❑

ARMS AND THE MAN

". . .Lovely Comic Soufflé, of Which Shaw No Doubt Would Be Proud. . ."

George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man," which closes the season at the Huntington Theatre Company, is simply and thoroughly delightful. The splendid acting, delicious irreverence, spirited direction and glorious settings, make this theater at its finest – and truly a grand finale.

The comedy, which premiered in 1894, established Shaw's playwrighting reputation, although many did not understand his serious intentions to satirize social restrictions and notions of warfare as a patriotic ideal (a prevailing view prior to the carnage of World War I).

The action takes place at the Petkoff residence, in a small town in Bulgaria, at the end of the Serbo-Bulgarian War of 1885. In this production, there's no mistaking the satire. From the opening moments, when Raina and her mother are rapturously extolling the battlefield exploits of her fiancée Serglus, something's askew in the rapture. It's not broad disbelief that's aroused (or, as in some productions, a sense of crude melodrama), but subtle, tantalizing suspicion. We eagerly await what's to come.

Raina's romantic dreams are interrupted by the sound of approaching gunfire beyond her tightly shuttered balcony window. Bluntschli, a Swiss mercenary serving in the Serbian army, climbs into her bedchamber for safety. He's dirty, but hardly a threat since his revolver is unloaded and he carries chocolates instead of cartridges. Summoning the honor of the Petkoffs as a mark of civilized hospitality, Raina hides him from discovery, and feeds him chocolate creams, which he devours as he expounds on real-life soldiering. Unlike her romantic ideal, he'd prefer to avoid further combat, and just sleep off his overwhelming weariness.

Of course, Bluntschli's level-headedness captures the young girl's fancy – though Shaw wends his way through some further complications and social commentary before the happy ending. Peace is declared just a few months later, and the armies disband. Sergius, whose exploits by now have been seriously faulted, returns to strut his vainglorious way across the Petkoff landscape.

The engagement quickly falls from its pinnacle of a "higher love" with the unexpected arrival of Raina's "chocolate cream soldier," and with her fiancee's pursuit of the maid Louka. In this subplot – Louka is engaged to Nicola, another servant, but is eager to rise above her station – Shaw articulates some of the ideas which will inspire his later "Pygmalion." The peacetime alliances and the position of Major Petkoff also allow for some swipes at his British countrymen.

Larry Carpenter's breakneck direction – it may be just a tad quick – keeps the production perfectly focused in its wry comic tone. Veering to farce without getting there, the evening is great fun, with occasional lines and some physical business standing out in even higher comic relief. Bluntschli's unexpected return, with many double takes and miscues, is hilarious.

The performances are impeccable: nicely understated, but coy and satirically suggestive all the same. Katy Selverstone endows Raina with a plausible mix of giddy romanticism and modern self-sufficiency. She is splendid drawing herself up to the full honor of the Petkoffs; even better when she suddenly realizes that she is being taken seriously by the man she loves. Kenneth L. Marks is good as Bluntschli, particularly when he returns scrubbed and confident in the dress uniform of a professional soldier, adeptly drafting orders for the troops, while admitting to an "incurably romantic disposition."

Jeff McCarthy, in crimson and gold braid, is properly pretentious and self-loving as Sergius. Laurie Walters, whose accent occasionally falters, is tart and funny as the ambitious Louka. Frances Cuka is riotous as Mrs. Petkoff, who is entranced even more than Raina with the chocolate-cream soldier. Her apoplexy on his return and her vigorous efforts to send him away are high points of the evening. Humbert Allen Astredo brings sweet bluster to Major Petkoff. Robert Pemberton's loyal Nicola has intelligent detail.

The Huntington production has glorious physical beauty that's almost worth the price of admission. James Leonard Joy's richly detailed scenery includes Russian and Turkish elements in three handsome sets (Raina's bedchamber, the Petkoff garden in springtime flower, and their strangely bookless library). His interiors are partial constructions, soaring to the sky and backed by distant mountains. David Murin's period costumes are varied and opulent (satins, bustles, braid, gold trim, etc.). Marcia Madeira's lighting casts a romantic glow upon the enterprise. It's all stunning and splendid.

The Huntington's "Arms and the Man" is a lovely comic soufflé, of which Shaw no doubt would have been very proud. It's lots of fun. Don't miss it. ❑

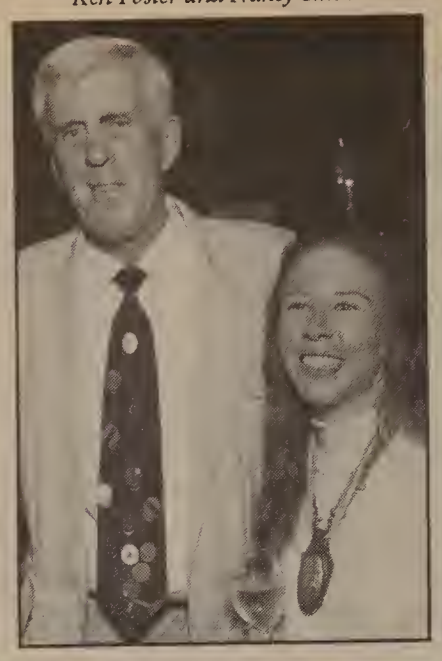
Columbia Point
This museum focuses on the political career and family heritage of President John F. Kennedy. Also, see the White House exhibition – an amazingly detailed 50' by 25' replica of the building celebrating its 200th birthday. Now you can take a water shuttle from Long Wharf (Quincy Market) to the museum. For more information call 929-4523.

MIT MUSEUM
265 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
For only a $2 donation, visitors can explore many wonderful exhibits that you don't have to be a rocket scientist to appreciate. First, there's "Crazy After Calculus: Humor at MIT," which chronicles some of the best college pranks ever committed. For the more science-minded, there's "MathSpace," a hands-on exploration of geometry that lets you tinker with math playthings.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave.
Approximately 125 of the museum's finest watercolors will be presented through Aug. 15 in "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." On view through Aug. 1 is John Singleton Copley's "Watson and Shark," the two large versions of his famous shark attack painting. MFA's new textile gallery is now open, featuring "From Arts and Crafts to Art Deco" through Aug. 29. MFA also presents "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Parts I & II"; part one through July 4 and part two until September.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Science Park
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (25 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle—all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. Call 589-0270.



MUSEUM OF TRANSPORTATION
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Muscle Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. June 19 & 20, the MOT celebrates the Corvette's 40th birthday. On the 19th, Corvettes from all over the Northeast will be displayed downtown at Christopher Columbus Waterfront Park; on the 20th, they will be displayed at the MOT, and awards will be given. Call 522-6547 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM
Central Wharf
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious—and dangerous—sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200 for more information.

This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

Paul Revere House
19 North Square
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338 for more information.

The USS Constitution Museum
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

THEATER

American Repertory Theatre
Loeb Drama Center
64 Brattle St., Cambridge
Elaine Stritch stars in the world premiere of "Cakewalk", a semi-autobiographical work by Peter Feibleman about his turbulent, 40-year relationship with playwright Lillian Hellman (The Children's Hour). Runs through July 17. Concurrently, the ART stages Philip Glass' opera "Orphee." Call 547-8300 for more information.

Back Alley Theater
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
Famed author Beth Henley (Crimes of the Heart, Miss Firecracker) brings her newest, critically-acclaimed play "The Lucky Spot" to the Boston area through May 29. It's Louisiana in 1934 and a guy who won some property is determined to turn it into a dance hall that will "bring the glamor, magic and music of city life to simple country folk." Call 576-1253 for reservations.

Beau Jest Moving Theatre
Lyric Stage
140 Clarendon St.
Beau Jest presents "A Midsummer Night's Fun Raiser" (no, it's fun, not fund) June 21 at 8 p.m. The show is a variety revue of comedy, music, dance and theatre. Tickets are $20, $25 at the door, and all proceeds will go to Beau Jest, which has been producing innovative, original theatre since 1984. Call 437-0657.

Charles Playhouse
76 Warrenton St.
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work. "A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline" is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912 for times and ticket prices.

Charles Playhouse
74 Warrenton St.
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, "Shear Madness" is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. Set in the city in which it plays, "Shear Madness" allows the audience to become sleuths and solve the murder mystery. Call 426-5225 for times and ticket prices.

Huntington Theatre Co.
264 Huntington Ave.
HTC presents George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man" through June 20. It's an irreverent spoof about a romantic young lady and the soldier who tries to hide in her bedroom. Call 266-0800 for times and tickets.

Kendall Cafe
233 Cardinal Medeiros Ave., Cambridge
Well, it sounds kinky to us: Steps Theater Company presents "The Throb of Life," an ongoing, continuing radio drama for adults only. Admission is $7; call 499-9580 for reservations and information.

Lyric Stage
140 Clarendon St.
Renowned actor Nehemiah Persoff performs his award-winning one-man show, "Tales of Sholem Aleichem," through June 27. Enjoy some of the most charming, wise and humorously touching stories about Eastern European Jewish life in the last century. Call 437-7172 for times and ticket information.

Medieval Manor
246 E. Berkeley St.
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of "Dark Ages" dining, this satiric musical transports its audience back to a comedic castle cabaret. There is no silverware for the six-course meal, customers have to raise their hands to leave the room, and everyone must pay homage to the king. Call 423-4900 for times and ticket prices.

Mystery Cafe
290 Congress St.
To celebrate its 5th year, the Mystery Cafe presents "Murder at Rick's Cafe" and "Let's Kill the Boss." Tickets, which include a four course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

North Shore Music Theatre
62 Dunham Rd., Beverly
Rodgers and Hammerstein's first collaboration, "Oklahoma!," is now in Massachusetts from until June 19. It's the musical's 50th anniversary, so mosey on out to North Shore. Call 508-922-8500 for times and ticket prices.

Out of the Blue
Back Alley Theater
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
A shipwreck leads to love, mistaken identities and, well, cross-dressing in Shakespeare's romantic comedy "Twelfth Night," performed through June 26. Shows are Thurs.-Sun. at 8 p.m. and there is a 4 p.m. matinee June 26. Call 576-1253 for more information.

Terrace Room
Boston Park Plaza Hotel
64 Arlington St.
"Forever Plaid," a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

Theatre Lobby
216 Hanover St.
Those zany nuns from "Nunsense" have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at 1-800-382-8080.

Underground Railway Theater
41 Foster St., Arlington
URT is proud to announce the premiere of a serious comedy (seriously!), "Washed-up Middle-aged Women" June 10-12 and 17-19 at 8 p.m. The script is based on scores of interviews with middle-aged women, and moves from song to comic sketch to dramatic monologue—just like a real life. Call 643-6916 for more details. Tickets are $10 in advance, $12 at the door.

U.S.I.T.L.
The Roxy
279 Tremont St.
The U.S. Improvisational Theatre League meets June 9 at 8 p.m. to compete in a Battle of the Sexes. Based loosely on hockey, the improv teams try to out-act each other; WBZ-TV's Joyce Kulhawik will be on hand to pick the evenings Most Valuable Player. Tickets are $12. Call 227-7699.

WORKSHOPS

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
808 Comm. Ave.
Non-cooks (with a pretty significant cash flow) should consider BU's four-part series on creating healthy, tasty meals at home. Restaurant consultant and cook Linda Criss teaches busy people with little time to shop each Tuesday through June 22. In room 117; tuition is $240. Participants will cook and eat a full meal each class. Call 353-9852 to register.

M.I.T.
Kresge Auditorium
84 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
M.I.T. hosts a national conference June 18-19 that most improper Bostonians will want to attend: "The Public Patron: Drafting a mandate for a federal arts agency," which will examine the roles and responsibilities of a federal arts agency in the U.S. today. Scheduled speakers include Ted Kennedy and Time magazine art critic Robert Hughes, to name a couple. Call 253-2341 to register; it'w $25 before June 14, $35 after.

NOW
971 Comm. Ave.
Get involved in planning the National Organization for Women's annual conference, which will be held right here in Beantown July 2-4. They're looking for volunteers to help before and during the conference. Call 782-1056.

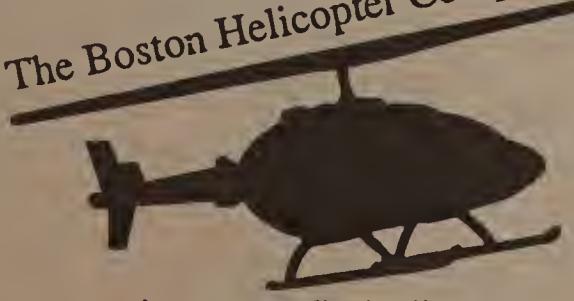
SOCIAL CALENDAR

BOSTON SKI & SPORTS CLUB
Commonwealth Pier
Next to World Trade Center
The BSSC presents a Boston Harbor Party Cruise on June 11 at 7:30 p.m. with a DJ, cash bar, dancing and room for 500 revelers. Tickets are $13 in advance; $15 on the boat. Call 789-4070 for more information.

FLY-AWAY BALL
Omni Parker House
60 School St.
The Fly-Away Ball is sure to be a world-class event, as guests are invited to dress as their favorite destination's inhabitants—Jamaican rastamen or English royalty at teatime. Sponsored by the Volunteer Fundraisers Association to benefit One on One, an organization that offers literacy, job skills and cultural competency to people new to the U.S. The gala takes place June 11 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20, or $25 at the door. Call 572-2778.



H.M.S. BOUNTY
Battleship Cove, Fall River
The tall ship H.M.S. Bounty, built in 1960 for MGM's film Mutiny on the Bounty, arrives at her permanent berth in Fall River's Battleship Cove on June 18 at 11:30 a.m. Currently en route from Miami, the ship will be greeted by the many special celebrities, and tours will be given. Call 676-8226.

JAIL & BAIL
Hyatt Regency Hotel, Cambridge
The Cambridge chapter of the American Cancer Society will be making citizens' arrests June 16-18 in an effort to raise funds. It's really cool: for $25 you call the ACS, tell them you want a friend, coworker, spouse or boss arrested for anything from "indecent exposure from the neck up" to "unfair labor practices." These people are thrown in a mock jail (so you win) and have to pay a bail of about $100 to the ACS in order to get out (so the ACS wins, too!). Also, there will be a Jailhouse Rock party at the Hyatt June 18 at 7 p.m. to benefit the ACS; tickets are $20. Call 643-3010 for more information.

MACCABI YOUTH GAMES
various locations
The Jewish Community Center of Greater Boston, sponsors of the Maccabi Youth Games, is looking for families to host some of the 800 young Jewish athletes (ages 12-16) during the week of Aug. 22-27. Call 341-2016 x102 or 965-7410 x138 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND CARD SHOW
at Boston College High
Morrissey Blvd.
The 1952 Mickey Mantle rookie card (worth a whopping $45,000!) highlights the largest event of its kind for collectors, national dealers and the public, slated for June 11-13. Celtic Robert Parish, Red Sox Mo Vaughn and Andre Dawson, and Bruins Andy Moog and Cam Neely (among many others) will be there, also. Admission is $4; hours are as follows: Fri., 4-10 p.m.; Sat., 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Sun., 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 1-508-822-2223 for more information.

CHEZ NOUS

"...The Praise is Well Deserved...[but] a Few Items on the Menu Defied Descriptions and Turned Out to Be Strangely Disappointing..."

Two hours exactly. That's how long Chez Nous allocates to its diners. This is presumably because it is so small, nestled in what looks to have once been the living room of a small house in Cambridge. Chez Nous has been raved about for some time both by yuppies and more establishment types. Much of the praise is well deserved, although a few items on the menu defied their descriptions and turned out to be strangely disappointing.

The same contrast was found in the waitstaff, from our server, Steve, who could not have been more helpful or knowledgeable – even going to the trouble of going out and buying frozen yogurt from Sage's for two diners with special dietary needs – to the oh-so-bored hostess, who gave the impression the diners were interrupting her fascinating evening of self-contemplation.

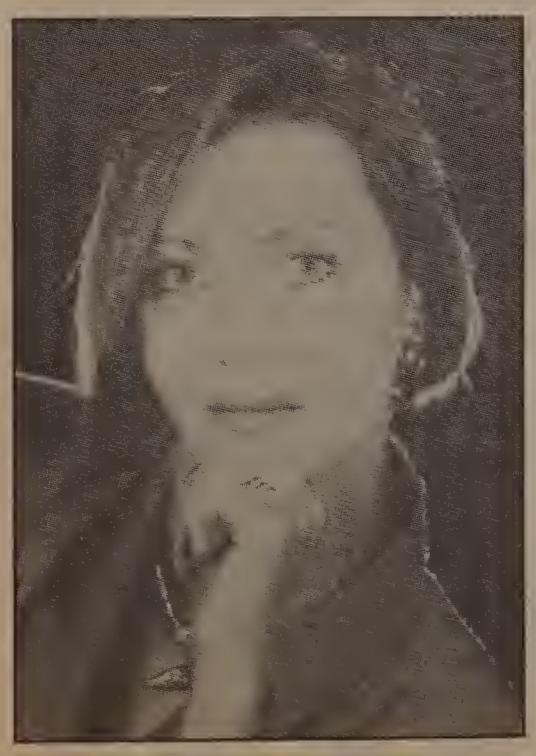
But on to the meal. Of the appetizers, smoked native bluefish salad with caper vinaigrette and fresh beets is for those who really like bluefish, though the capers cut some of the richness of the fish. Tiny, sizzling Maine mussels with almond-garlic butter and a hint of lemon reminded us of how delicate this apricot-colored mollusk can be. A spicy shrimp with black bean salad added a Southwestern flavor. Can anyone explain why black beans refuse to be pronged by a fork and always have to be chased around the plate?

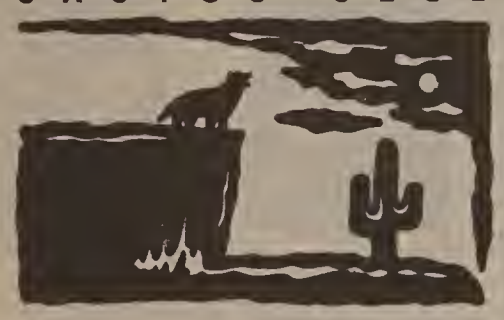
On a previous occasion, the crispy goat cheese cake (warm) with roasted red peppers and an arugula salad with a delicious vinaigrette had been the highlight of my meal. Only out of a sense of duty to The Improper Bostonian readers did I sample something different the second time around.

A 1990 Puligny-Montrachet, I'm reliably informed, was crisp and correctly chilled. The wine list is being revised, but will continue to be varied and contain an unusually good selection of half bottles, something too many restaurants neglect.



Entrees range in price from $13 to $18 and of the eight selections, one is vegetarian and three are seafood. Mediterranean fisherman's stew, which contained white fish, mussels and shrimp in a powerful tomato and fennel sauce, was served on pasta, and I would certainly order it again. Roast duck with ginger and orange sauce was a welcome variation on the tired duck with orange, and the ginger cuts the cloying sweetness of the orange.

Tender loin chops with a lamb sauce with garlic, rosemary, tomato and black olives evoked images of Provence and, like the other entrees, was accompanied by the evening's vegetable selection of snow peas, julienned carrots and red onions as well as pan-roasted potatoes. Chicken in a restaurant can so often be disappointing, but the free-range roasted chicken with a sun-dried tomato and garlic sauce was unusual and unusually good.



On a previous occasion, we had raved about the desserts – an excellent creme brulee, a rhubarb crepe with caramel sauce and other innovative selections. On this evening, however, we were limited to three rather pedestrian choices: strawberry shortcake, creme caramel, and hazelnut ice cream with ground hazelnuts and warm chocolate sauce – the winner in my book.

So is Chez Nous worth the raves? Yes, allowing for the menu's occasional inconsistencies, if you can eat in two hours and if you don't mind the feeling that some of the staff think they're doing you a favor by waiting on you. ❑

SOME LIKE IT COLD

"...The Only Possible Point of Drinking Wine is to Derive Maximum Pleasure..."

"Oh, my Lord!" I cried, suddenly remembering as the doorbell rang twice. "Don't tell me you forgot to chill the wine?" Words alone could not express my embarrassment.

When I finally got the locks unbolted, everyone swarmed in past me at once, chattering away. It was pointless trying to hold them at bay; despite fair warning, they all attacked the white wine. To my amazement, however, the bottles of tepid Meursault I had provided were devoured to the last ounce without one complaint – and this from a crowd which did not always observe the usual niceties.

Although I barely managed to salvage half a glass for myself, I noted the striking flavors this white Burgundy showed. Despite this, however, I was strangely disappointed on each occasion I was able to find the wine again and properly chill it for dinner.

Years later, these memories came storming back. The Master of Wine examinations I had begun preparing for required a detailed exposition of wine characteristics. With the exception of sparklers, wines are analyzed at room temperature.

Practice tastings constituted a new and wonderful experience analogous, I thought, to removing a puzzle from a person struggling to speak; it was as though I was hearing for the first time in vivid and dramatic form what it was the various wines had to say. Important distinctions among grape varieties, regional styles and winemaking techniques began to emerge and I was reminded of the special savoriness of the Meursault everyone had once so unexpectedly enjoyed.

Although I had long paid lip service to the idea that better wines require less chilling, the reality was that when dinnertime arrived, so did the ice bucket. To me, a white wine's major function was to refresh and quench my thirst. Why, I wondered, were the abundant flavors I could now perceive so muted by the cold?

Most of what we describe as flavor, it turns out, is actually aroma. Our taste buds themselves are rather primitive, able to discern only sweet, sour, salty and bitter sensations. All the essential flavor nuances we perceive (e.g. the "peach" or "vanilla" or "strawberry") in fact register on the olfactory nerve, not the tongue. Prove this to yourself the next time you have a head cold; your blocked nasal passages render everything bland. In normal circumstances, what we call the retro-nasal aromas waft upwards as vapors from the back of our palate to the brain's olfactory center.

Aroma is the heart and soul of any wine's personality. Holding a glass up to your nose constitutes the introduction. But aroma compounds become more volatile (i.e., they are released and made available to us as gases) the higher the surrounding temperature. Aromas in the mouth are so pronounced because with the first sip your body's heat immediately warms the liquid, liberating more of these compounds.

It follows that, within important limits, the warmer the temperature of the wine you drink, the more of it you will taste. Needless to say, this is not always desirable. Along with suppressing aroma, chilling specifically reduces impressions of sourness, sweetness and alcohol. Wines displaying aggressive acid, cloying sugar or a harsh finish then will probably taste better cold. Simple wines without much flavor to mask are also candidates for refrigeration. But in order to appreciate them fully, I rarely chill finely-balanced white wines anymore.

Summer temperatures somewhat change the equation. Alcohol evaporates more readily at higher heats; in these conditions, it may dominate wine aromas. Unpleasant off-flavors may also be encouraged. To minimize this, a light chilling of even the best wines makes sense. Once in the glass, temperatures will quickly rise anyway.

The only possible point of drinking wine is to derive maximum pleasure. This commodity comes in many different forms, of course, all the way from the enhanced self-esteem some feel when buying "the right wine" to the satisfaction of enjoying delicious flavors. If the latter is your goal, try this: pour out two glasses of a good white wine; cover each with plastic wrap; refrigerate one for two hours and put the other aside; remove the plastic and then smell and taste them together. Are they the same? ❑

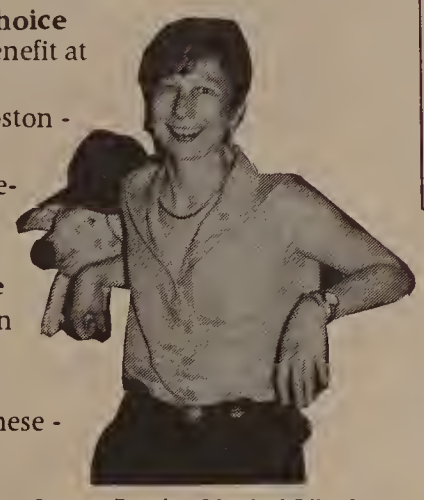
Ice, Ice, Everywhere

Bottled spring water drinkers know that one of the most important criteria for choosing a bottled water is the location of the spring. Is it in a protected natural state far from civilization or is it downstream from a nuclear reactor or toxic waste dump? Akva, a new bottled water, comes from a remote and isolated source in Iceland and the purity of the water is beyond question. Even though few may be aware of it, Iceland is a land known for its hot springs, geysers, and volcanoes. Boston is the first city in the US to get this water from the far North. So try a sip of a glacier - without ever leaving the city.

Chill Out

There is a new product out called Rapid Ice that won't take care of all life's stresses but will certainly relieve any anxiety that arises over not having a chilled bottle of wine in the house. To use it, just pull the reusable sleeve-like device from your freezer, put it around the bottle, and the cold gel in the device will take the bottle from room temperature to serving temperature in just five minutes. Afterwards, it will keep it cool for several hours. So when the Queen Mother drops in unexpectedly and there's no chilled chardonnay, just pop Rapid Ice around the bottle and before you can ask "who's the family firebug," the wine will be ready. Rapid Ice can be found in the Wine Enthusiast catalog for $11.95. (800) 356-8466 for catalog or to order.

Juicy Details



It's about time that the out-of-town press realized that there are other good places to eat besides the usual gang of four - Biba, Olives, Jasper's and Michela's. Congratulations to both Il Panino and On the Park for being mentioned in the New York Times travel section as great places to eat in Boston! Newbury College is offering a limited summer series of culinary courses with subjects like Italian confections and seafood cookery. For information, call 730-7172. Reasonably priced on Newbury Street? Milano's Italian Kitchen is now open at 47 Newbury Street with every item on the menu under $10. Cara Vera's at 372 Commercial Street has opened for dinner and offers inexpensive Italian dishes and pizzas. And lastly, the most expensive detail, the Meridien Hotel is planning an eight million dollar renovation. Congratulations to Joseph Ribas, executive chef of the Omni Parker House, who was named Regional Chef of the Year by the Chefs of America Foundation.

The Sound View

"...[Gabriel's] new show shapes up to be a flamboyant in your face ride; Apart from the main festival fare, tips for clubs include Brazilian saxophonist Ivo Perelman..."

GLOBE JAZZ FESTIVAL: Saxophonist Ed Wilkerson Jr's octet, Eight Bold Souls

Leave it to Peter Gabriel to plan a stage spectacular for his first tour in six years. Theatrical staging has always been a staple for his concerts, from his early 70s tenure with Genesis to his steamrolling solo career. In his Boston solo debut at the Paradise in 1978, he donned fluorescent face paint and an umbrella hat. On his last tour, in 1986-87, he was "attacked" by hydraulic lighting towers that swept down like mad, mechanical giraffes.

But that's nothing compared to this singer's current tour, which hits the Worcester Centrum June 19 and 20. Gabriel's 1992 album Us may sound like a murky, toned-down affair in contrast to his past records (with the big exception of "Steam," which seems like an obvious clone of previous hit "Sledgehammer"). But his new show shapes up to be a flamboyant, in-your-face ride.

The staging stretches 120 feet, and features two stages, a round one with a floating overhead dome and a square one. They're connected by a conveyor belt that transports Gabriel and his band, and – get this – they represent opposing worlds (i.e. the square stage represents the male, the urban and the water, while the round one represents the female, organic and fire). Guess the gender thing must relate to the relationship songs on Us; Gabriel must feel like he's been burned by the fire. There's also a projection screen which can move from the back of the stage to the front, from vertical to horizontal, and rapidly spin 360 degrees above the band while images are projected on it.

If this sounds like a real circus, let's just hope it doesn't become the mess that "Steam" was on the Grammy Awards: Gabriel's fake he-man chest and the over-busy dancers were bad enough, but those loud geysers that shot up when he sang the word "steam" were an anti-musical annoyance.

Musically, Gabriel's band still includes Brookline-bred bassist Tony Levin (who'll rejoin King Crimson after the tour), guitarist David Rhodes and drummer Manu Katche, plus keyboardist-vocalist Joy Askew (Joe Jackson, Laurie Anderson) and Indian violinist L. Shankar (underused on Gabriel's recent "Saturday Night Live" appearance, but a haunting virtuoso on double-necked violin).

Elsewhere

The next two weeks are really a bonanza for jazz fans, largely due to the Boston Globe Jazz Festival. The big shows include Ray Charles at a free afternoon Hatch Shell concert on the Charles River Esplanade June 13, and the Jackie McLean Sextet at the Berklee Performance Center June 19. Connoisseurs of creative jazz should also be eyeing a trio with saxophonist Joshua Redman (who'll release an album with Pat Metheny this fall) June 16, and saxophonist Ed Wilkerson Jr.'s octet Eight Bold Souls June 17. Both of those shows are at the Museum of Fine Arts courtyard.

Apart from the main Festival fare, tips for the clubs include Brazilian saxophonist Ivo Perelman (with pianist Joanne Brackeen, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Barry Altschul) at Nightstage June 13 and drummer Marvin "Smitty" Smith's new septet (including fellow Steve Coleman associate Robin Eubanks on trombone) at the Middle East June 16. Unless, of course, sax piper Kenny G is more of your idea of jazz. He'll be at Great Woods June 13.

Other recommendations on the rock/folk front would include wry folk-gospel hipster Lyle Lovett and his band at Great Woods June 17 and pointed art-Goth rockers New Model Army at the Paradise June 19. ❑

Early Byrd

"...Is there anything you ever wanted to know about a crumhorn or a viola de gamba but were afraid to ask?.."

Not unlike the great fairs of medieval Europe that drew artisans and merchants from the far and near corners of the old world, the Boston Early Music Festival and Exhibition is a Mecca for the global community of musicians, instrument makers and publishers specializing in early music. And like those great and fabled fairs of the past, the Early Music Festival affords not only an opportunity for vendors to sell their wares, it is also a venue for the exchange of ideas and the presentation of entertainment, both lavish and intimate.

This year marks the seventh biennial Boston Early Music Festival and its primary focus is on the music of William Byrd and Claudio Monteverdi. In terms of the performance schedule, it promises to be the most ambitious to date. This year's main event features Boston Early Music Festival co-director Andrew Parrott leading an international assembly of instrumentalists and vocalists - some of the brightest stars in the field of early music - in a fully-staged production of Claudio Monteverdi's opera, L'Orfeo. Performances take place at the Sanders Theater at 8 p.m. on June 15, 16, 18, and 19. Tickets are priced from $40-$19.

Other concerts include Colin Tilney performing music of William Byrd on harpsichord and virginal at First Church in Cambridge at 8 p.m. on June 16. At 8 p.m. on June 17 members of BEMF L'orfeo cast lead by lutenist Paul O'Dette present a program of madrigals and instrumental music by Byrd, Monteverdi and their contemporaries at Sanders. Joel Cohen and The Boston Camerata are at the First Church at 8 p.m. on June 18 to continue their exploration of ballads and folkhyms of 18th and 19th century England and America.

Seventeenth century Italian music for brass is on the menu for Concerto Palatino's program at Sanders on June 19 at 2 p.m. And at 2 p.m. on June 20, John Finney leads the Handel & Haydn Society Chorus in liturgical music by Byrd at the First Church. Tickets are for the above concerts are priced at $25, $20, and $15.

IF YOU GO

Seventh Biennial Boston Early Music Festival

June 15 -20

Call 661-1812 for more info

If it's something romantic and intimate that you seek, one of the BEMF Late Night Concerts at the First Church, all beginning at 10:45 p.m., may be the perfect interlude between dinner and whatever romance may follow. Festival co-director Paul O'Dette can be heard in a solo lute recital of music by Dowland and Byrd on June 16. The following evening the string band, the King's Noyse, performs ballad-inspiring instrumental music of English renaissance. On June 18, Elisabeth Wright performs English and Italian keyboard music on harpsichord and virginal. The final Late Night Concert features master harpist Andrew Lawrence-King in a 17th century program. Tickets for all Late-Night Concerts are $15.

Is there anything you've ever wanted to know about a crumhorn or a viola de gamba but were afraid to ask? Instrument makers are a dedicated breed and are passionate about what they do. They want you to know about their artistry, so if there is something you would like to know, by all means ask!

Also on hand at the exhibition will be the A&R directors from some of the leading CD companies that focus on early music. They will be selling selected titles from their catalogues at discount prices. Hours for the BEMF exhibition are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., June 16 through 18 and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., June 19. A one-day pass is $7. A weekly pass for the real devotee is $30.

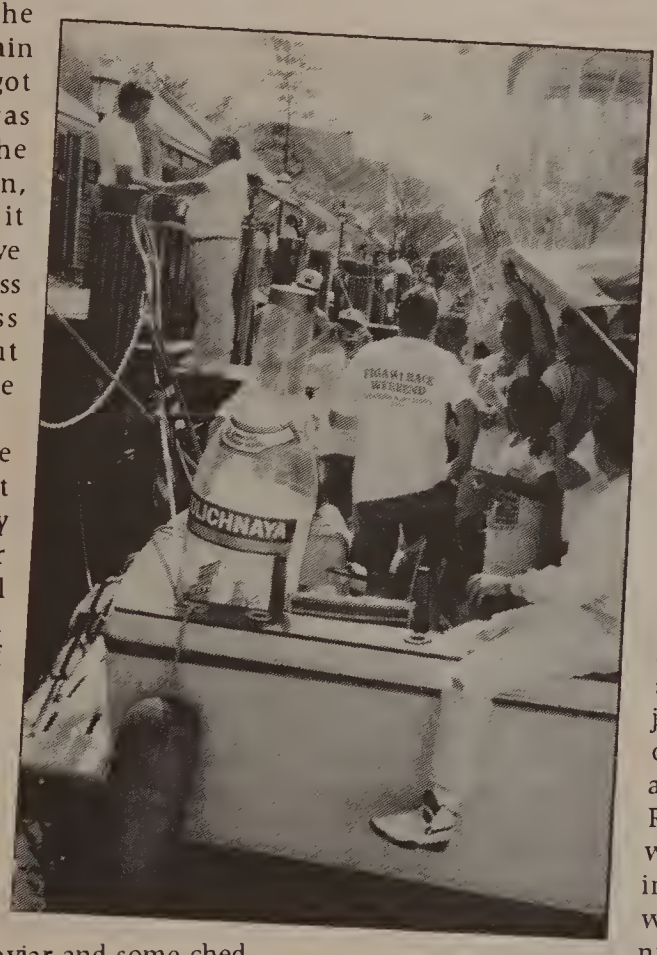
Time was when the term early music conjured up images of dowdy intellectuals sitting around in coffee houses playing out-of-tune recorders, or of bespectacled scholars who, never singing even a single note, hunched themselves over dusty manuscripts in dimly lit libraries. Each year, the world of early music reaches a continually expanding audience that is enlightened, fascinated and entertained by the sounds of a world long past. The sphere of early music today has gone beyond what anyone might have dreamt of twenty years ago, having engendered period-instrument and historically informed performances of music from the classical and romantic eras that have provided us with fresh perspectives on the standard repertory. Scholarship, to be sure, continues to play a vital role in bringing to light long forgotten manuscripts. Equally important are the artisans who reconstruct musical instruments of the past and the musicians who perform this music, take risks with it and make it truly come alive. ❑

About Last Night. . . / Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

THE LOST WEEKEND...WHERE THE FIGAWI?

". . .This Thing Was Floating Hedonism, a Veritable 24-Hour Debauch Festival. . ."

Somehow, we survived. Don't ask me how. It takes more than just skill or luck to navigate your way through the Figawi weekend on Nantucket. It takes endurance and the ability to put your body through some of the most grueling tests known to mankind. Looking back, it all kind of blurs together, but I'm attempting to pull up some memories from the depths of my polluted brain. It all started at 5 a.m. Saturday. . .



My lovely friend and I rushed to haul our butts down to the Hyannis Marina to catch a boat that was actually sailing over in the Figawi race. Contrary to popular belief, there is more to this weekend than just an excuse to get away from the city for three days and destroy brain cells. The main event is a regatta from Hyannis to Nantucket, and I had been assured that I was going to be on the winning boat, kindly provided by Tom Donnelly of SmartBoats.

But, like some awful dream sequence, we wandered around Hyannis Harbor, beginning to feel uncomfortably like we would never be able to put these damn bags down, and wouldn't you know, we missed the boat by that much. So we were relegated to cattle-car class on the ferry, where the only discernible advantages were that a.) it was raining and we enjoy being relatively dry, and b.) there were drinks. After our second cocktail of the morning we were congratulating ourselves on missing the sailboat, and finding the bar as quickly as we did.

The sun broke through just as we entered Nantucket Harbor. It lay before us: the Promised Land. We grabbed our bags, which had somehow gotten 15 pounds heavier during the trip over, and headed out to find some action.

We found it. Mon Amour, a.k.a. the Love Boat. This thing was floating hedonism, a veritable 24-hour debauch festival, a boat whose sole mission in life was to get everyone on board lit up and laid. It was only about three in the afternoon, but everyone on board already had the glow of the healthily intoxicated. Shots of Jaegermeister were tipped back like water, people were shimmying out of their clothes and inhibitions, the Captain was getting nervous, and we were loving life. At this juncture, it occurred to us that we still had no place to stay the night, but we were boozily confident that something would come up.

Finally tearing ourselves away from the floating playland, our first stop of the night was the Rose and Crown, from here on known as the Rose and Juiced, as in "We went to the Rose and got juiced." One of our male escorts for the evening, a certain "John Smith," got so juiced he was evicted from the Rose and Crown, even though it was hard to believe that in that morass of drunkenness he stood out enough to be asked to leave.

We hit the street without him but promptly began to suffer from withdrawal symptoms. With the kind of drunken logic that justifies even the most bizarre actions, we bought a pint of imitation Rumplemintz, and, as an afterthought, a jar of caviar and some cheddar crackers to help cushion the blow. This numbing combination sustained us during the taxi ride to the Chicken Box bar, which turned out to have a line in front of it that stretched to Martha's Vineyard. So horrified were we at the prospect of standing in any line long enough to nap in, we scared our cab driver into taking us to that "other" island hot spot: the Muse.

The peppermint juice was really starting to saturate the gray cells now, but even while reeling around the Muse in a haze, we started to wonder where the hell we were going to stay that night. We did, of course, have some options. "Friends of friends," after all, had a room at a B&B, but we had no key, no idea which room it was, and our luggage reminded us that we couldn't walk a straight line carrying our own weight, never mind the dead body I had in my bag.

Our energy rapidly flagging, our merry band decided we would have to find that room, somehow. So we did what our boggled brains assured us was a good idea. We somehow managed to determine which was their room, and gained entrance through a less than legal method (I climbed through the window).

At this point, our pooped-out little fromage a trois huddled on the floor (which was about as soft as Donald Trump's heart), and when the registered guests stumbled back into the room in the wee hours, the three of us were engaged in animal sex acts. Just kidding.

Sunday a.m. we awoke, unrefreshed but ready for more punishment, covered in floor-bruises and stiffer than the fines for drunk driving. We re-linked with our long-lost friend John Smith (who had found sleep space in the Island clink) and headed towards town.

Down on the docks, pandemonium reigned supreme. Revelers on Mon Amour were whooping it up because their captain had been taken away in a seersucker straightjacket, bimbos on a boat tied up across from the Ropewalk bar were entertaining everyone with gratuitous nudity, a crazed individual was asking anybody within range how he could get the hell off this island, and hordes of people were stumbling out of the official Figawi Tent.

The rest of the night was a whirlwind tour of the Rose and-By-Now-Very-Juiced, the Tavern, the Club Car, the Atlantic Cafe, and the Chicken Box. In one semi-sober moment, I actually entertained the thought of getting out while I still enjoyed diplomatic relations with my liver. Then I woke up, and decided I was here on Satan's Sandbox to play, and I wasn't going to give up until Monday afternoon.

Dateline: June 1, Seminole Point. My final thoughts on Figawi: Thank God it's over for another year. The poor people who live on the island and actually had to put up with this madness must be feeling the exact same way, and I can only thank them for being so tolerant of those urban yahoos (us included) who come over every year to trash their homeland. Thanks especially to Mitch and everyone at fabulous 76 Main Street, and Sally, Kath, Jeff and Mr. Smith for putting up with us and our Improper behavior. Maybe by this time next year, I will actually have recovered and be ready to do it all over again. ❑

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

General

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Bull & Finch Pub (Cheers)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

Frogg Lane Bar & Grill
720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos, B-7. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

The Littlest Bar
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

Market Place Cafe
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m.. "Street Magic" A cappella every Wednesday at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

Province Street Pub
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

Warren Tavern
241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, B-5. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals & athletes. Also claims to attract Boston's most beautiful women (?!) Local celebs don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

Pop/Jazz/ Blues/Reggae

Cantab Lounge
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

Nightstage
497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb, A-3. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

Paradise Rock Club
254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos, C-3. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

Rathskeller
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos, C-5. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

Ryle's Jazz Club
876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb, B-5. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryle's. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

Western Front
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

Breweries

Commonwealth Brewing Company
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

Irish

Black Rose
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

O'Leary's
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

Art Smart

At the end of June, the Levinson-Kane Gallery will close their doors for good, but not without the style in which they have always conveyed good taste, humor, and excellence in art representation.

Not in the history of Newbury Street openings and closings has an opportunity to purchase art like this ever occurred. We will miss the gallery for its political humor, the "dog" shows, funky furniture, and the sheer pleasure of art as adventure.

In the spirit of art for art's sake, June Levinson and Barbara Kane have decided to close "not with a whimper but with a bang!" by having an inventory reduction sale. This is a unique opportunity to acquire something wonderful; first-rate works at very reasonable prices. Discounts will be up to 50 percent off. As always, Rob Levinson will also be on hand to assist in selection of art. The sale will be offered through the month of June. All sales final.

Levinson-Kane Gallery, 14 Newbury Street, third floor (247-0545); Tues.-Sat. 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Thereafter, by appointment.

Kitchen Aid

Weston Kitchens is having a sample sale on famous Bertch and Siematic kitchens. The Bertch system is a painted white maple built-in unit with a grouping of upper and lower cabinets including a lovely island with a wine rack. The original price for this custom kitchen was $15,000, here it's $8,000. The additional counter tops include a corian counter with an integral double corian sink, while the self-standing island is outfitted with white tiles, hand-painted with a leaf motif and a cook-top cutout. Counters were originally $5,000, now $2,300.

Siematic is the Rolls Royce of kitchens. This particular sample sale includes a high-gloss polyester finish in dove gray, making it particularly easy to clean, and impervious to scratching. The original price was $45,000, here $11,210. Counters were $4,500, now $2,3000 for counters. Checks accepted, no credit cards; all sales final.

Weston Kitchens, 868 Worcester Road, Wellesley (237-4264). Mon.-Sat. 10 a.m.-5 p.m., till sold.

Brrrr!Furrrrr!

It's been a long, cold fall, winter and spring, and whether you hang out at the B.C. games in a raccoon coat, or are dripping in sable, Casler Furs has excellent prices for the storing and luminizing of all your furs. All coats, regardless of style or quality, are stored for $28 each, and cleaning (luminizing) for $38. In the capable hands of the manager, Jim Moore, your coat will be expertly attended to. With over 18 years experience in the fur business, attention will be given by Jim on many details: torn linings, loose buttons, ripped armholes and worn edges, plus suggestions for remodeling if you're in the market for a style change. Personal checks and major credit cards are accepted. Storage available throughout the summer, but it is recommended that furs be stored away from heat in special cold storage lockers to prevent linings from drying out and prolong the life of the fur.

Casler Furs, 281 Needham Street, Newton, Marshal's Plaza (969-3877), Mon.-Sat. 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

Clothes Out

After 29 years in business at the same location on Route 9, Lenards is closing its doors. The opportunity to purchase very fine classic woman's professional clothing to elegant gowns is available at 50 percent off and more, sizes 4-18.

Lovely "little black dresses" for $170, and several cocktail suits in long sleeve black satin with net and sequin inserts originally $725, now $180. There is a good selection of separates: pants, walking shorts, skirts, blouses and knit tops, all at 50-80 percent off. A small but elegant selection of imported leather handbags and evening bags, both beaded and metal, are available.

In this "everything must go" sale, even store fixtures, mannequins and window displays, are selling at rock-bottom prices. Seamstresses will be on the premises for alterations during the liquidation All sales are final. No lay-aways. Through June 30; checks, Visa, MC, Amex.

Lenards, 1240 Boylston Street, Chestnut Hill, Route 9. Parking available behind store (734-5888). Mon.-Sat. 10 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Thurs. evenings 'til 8 p.m.

Undercover

This specialty furniture store is having a sale on its custom slipcovered sofas and loveseats. The sofa styles are Victorian, English and Classic, with a selection of more than 30 fabric choices for custom slipcovers. Colors vary from washed-out white, rose, cream, beige to intense blues, greens and burgundy.

Selections include; the Donatello, a straight-arm 90 inch muslin sofa originally $1,850, now $1,299. The Divinci Suite includes a 90 inch sofa at $1,995, now $1,299 and 60 inch loveseat was $1,895, here $1,199. The Medici classic 90" tuxedo arm sofa was $1,925, now $1,299. All sofas include down-filled seat cushions, slipcover fabric of your choice, and a one-time opportunity to order sofa as a sleeper for an additional $100, usually $300.

Because sofas are customized especially for you, the order may take up to 12 weeks. Personal checks. Visa, MC, Amex, Discover.

Heartwood, 880 Commonwealth Avenue, Brookline (731-3335); 1013 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge (547-1213). Mon.-Fri. 11 a.m.-7 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m.-6 p.m., Sun. noon-5 p.m. ❑

Sally, Kathy & Jeffy
WE LOVE YOU. Can we all go back, Jack, and do it again? Please? Our livers are almost recovered. Thanks for making this booze cruise of a weekend most sweet.
Your "roommates"

Gary Gowan,
We were gentle on you, yes? Are you unhappy, no? No Saabling into your pillow, now. We still love you more than the Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. XXOO,
Someone Who's Glad You Lived

Randy, So, you think you have a popsicle, huh? Your dink is so small that one would have to use a magnifying glass to find it! If you are ever stupid enough to be in the vicinity of Brookline again, there are quite a few Pam's who would like nothing better than to give you a big boot in the ass, although not the kind you might enjoy. The Ramrod boy's would be more suited to you. You really ought to see a shrink about this fantasy you seem to have with the name Pam. People with the name Pam are way out of your league to even bother with you.
Pamela

Bonehead,
Are the streets really paved with gold out there? It's too bad you can't make a living making crank calls.
Still waiting for my 5%.

To my Butthead Ex-Boyfriend,
No More Cheese! The Fat Man Walks At Night! Shut-up Jerky! Hugs and Kisses.'
P.S. Miss me yet? Of course!
Your beautiful Ex

Goljerp,
I'll break you!
DAC

Susie,
Don't get so stressed out. You're going to drive yourself nuts. Don't worry I'll be back in a month...err week.
-D

Lewie,
Come back or I'll find you and beat you like the poodle-lover you are. PLEASE DON'T GO. Or, better yet, take me with you. Aaauurrrgghh!
Squirrel Girl

John C.,
You've bloody well heard this a million times, but I'll say it again. You are a bastard. If you ever ask for my help again, it's back in the WC for you, wanker.
Chas

Glitch,
You psychopath. Do you really have to fly half a world away to harm innocent animals? There are so many around here more deserving of your lead.
SQGM

Miss Thang,
All right! Here comes....Mr. Kielbasa!!! Da da da-da, da da da-da!
Your Queen

Papa C.,
I appreciate the attention but no more blood please.Dear Ruthie (I mean "Wee"),
Thanks for an awesome Memorial Day weekend. It was perfect. Let's do it again soon.
Jim

Akira,
You didn't tell us that this place was crawling with crazed locals not to mention the demons. What kind of a nut sold it to you?
Gene & Issac

Dear "Women in Red Mini-Dress,"
Had fun staring at/with you at the late "Accidents" show. Thanks for the quick kiss by the cigarette machine. See you the next time The Accidents play, but leave your boyfriend at home. Also, what is your name?
Mirage

Margaret, Laura & Lynne
Welcome to part two, Philip talks when he's drunk! I can smell your fear already. Among his words were these choice facts – Laura, you taste bad! Maybe you should work on getting that ass down to a size 20. Margaret, do you really hate sex, or just men? Lynne, you suck (or rather, won't) in bed. Maybe he was just too big for you. I know you've all heard how gorgeous I am. Unlike you, I've never let myself go .The wedding is on August 20, maybe we'll see you there? Not!
P.S., yes, I did pierce his nipples - yummy!

ROCKIE HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — JUNE 9- JUNE 22, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

First we have to accommodate the weight placed on already overburdened shoulders due to Saturn's retrograde station today, although, on the up side, mass frustration with government policies may take a rest during the retrogression. Then we have to endure a difficult square between militant Mars in proud Leo and power-crazed Pluto Friday morning. If we manage to get through the weekend without another war erupting somewhere (this aspect rattles Saddam Hussein) we'll still be barraged by lies and excuses midweek as Mercury opposes delusional Neptune and inventive Uranus. These are media madness aspects, so prepare for the worst or, if your humor is properly skewed, the best the "bad news is good entertainment" mavens have to offer. Speaking of which, Bill Clinton will be in the midst of a volatile Mars transit over his Leo sun this week, the first in two years. Keep one eye on the tube as you wind up matters that began a month ago while you prepare for the next new moon (Saturday, the 19 at 28 Gemini at 3:52 p.m.) and the summer solstice (Monday, the 20 at 11 p.m.). The best expression of paternal love, a sun trine to Saturn, is exact on the day after Father's Day. Close, but no cigar.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

You can wrestle bucks from a financial backer, have an extraordinary (and potentially dangerous) sexual encounter and play a sport to the best of your athletic prowess this weekend. Or you could run into a stone wall, get mugged in a dark alley and incur the wrath of the IRS. Either way the ball bounces, after your feisty Mars ruler confronts obsessive, manipulative Pluto you'll know you've been experienced. The new moon sends ex-schoolmates, siblings and neighbors in and out of your life for the next month.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Bulls born in mid-May are prime targets for a partner's obsessive/compulsive behavior, grand stand plays that hog the center of attention. And while there's a powerful sexual overtone to the game, it could turn nasty before you know it. Just who is ruling your roost? Who stays home, who goes? Mercury brings a variety of travel info and alternatives midweek which you shouldn't discount because of the weirdness. The other Bulls seek expensive but non-lethal forms of recreation and romance. Father's Day is both honorable and profitable.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Happy Birthday. The best present would be a clean slate (the second Gemini new moon of the year is coming up) and a way to avoid the rough and tumble ruckus in the neighborhood this weekend. Be careful tootling around town, running errands, challenging local heroes and veterans. Somebody wants to fight, and it ain't you, babe. Money in funny ways: an insurance policy, a tax rebate if you open your mail, return all your calls. But who can be bothered about bucks when you're having so much fun?

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

War games, prizefights, open heart surgery on Lifetime? Your taste in entertainment this weekend runs to blood sports, so unless you're willing to lick your wounds. Don't push your luck when confronting the bruiser working the door, the lout cutting into line. Clever conversation won't save your ass. That, however, you could sell. When Mars and Pluto, two of the sexier planets, mix it up, things you never thought you could do become strangely appealing and readily available. Another indecent proposal? Cleanse your soul at the summer solstice.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

Temper, temper. Watch yours, Bubba. Mars in your sign gives you more strength, for good or for ill, but when this aggressive planetary energy is challenged by destructive Pluto, your sense of security, family solidarity is threatened. Lock the windows, batten the hatches, hell can break loose, or worse, the plumbing breaks down. However, you'll encounter less opposition now that Saturn is retrograde in your house of partners and the public and probably receive genuine, bankable support after the sun trines Saturn on the 21th.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

You can pass through the weekend unscathed if you let unconscious anger out in appropriate places: the shrink's office, the gym or in a journal of your dreams. Just don't mix it up with the power behind the throne or the merchant behind his counter. Road warriors must avoid the Highway Patrol. Midweek as your Mercury ruler confronts imaginative Neptune and offbeat Uranus, you'll have truly inspired takes on your latest creation and maybe some opposition from professional peers. That'll pass with the new moon.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)

Almost, but not quite. A fateful inconjunct (150 degrees) between Jupiter in your sign and your Venus ruler puts a desirable deal, an attractive companion within reach, but not yet in hand. Wait a month. These disappointments build character as surely as they deplete wallets. Still, if you let your mind drift to distant places and foreign publications you'll find another sort of stimulus, one that'll have an immediate payoff. Talk of travel, info about the (summer?) house and family can spur movement.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Adding insult to injury? Be very careful you don't burst your boss' bubble because you may have to pay heavily, say a pound of flesh. A nasty square between Mars and Pluto, your two ruling planets, provokes conflict and sets a purely personal intention (the will to power?) at odds with a career goal. You may not have control over what happens, but you should try to curb your temper, downplay your desire to have it your way. Incidentally, this aspect has powerful sexual connotations that can't be ignored. Certainly not by you.

SAGITARIUS (NOVEMBER 22- DECEMBER 21)

Saturn turning retrograde in your house of communication, changes your interest (more or less serious?) in a school, local publication or sales organization. If you're as lucky as you claim, the potentially violent Mars/Pluto square this weekend will occur without you ever noticing, and all the conversation Mercury brings when it opposes the planets in your money house in the middle of the week will turn out to be profitable once you rise to meet the challenge and digest the details.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

A friend and your money (an investment?) may cause problem, ditto the union and your dues, but once you blow off a little steam this weekend, that situation should move right along. More to the point is the deal already in the works and the conversations with your partner or attorney that'll last through most of the summer. Mercury opposes Neptune and Uranus in your sign midweek, and will do so again in July (retrograde) and August. Sorry, but everything in its own good time.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Another round of "gotcha" as cantankerous Mars in your marriage house prods at a secret about your family or boss. Pluto, at the top of your chart, won't give in and Mars won't stop, so you may be the one who's wrestling over the outcome. This passionate power play doesn't last for long although a gentler version comes up later this summer. Info about an aspect of work, service or health in the middle of the week, which can also take up a lot of summer downtime. Get all the details you can now.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Two separate energies, one sweet and tenuously loving, good-natured and generous although not particularly successful; the other proud and passionate, headstrong and egotistical vie for your attention this weekend. Don't let the obvious macho hit obliterate the gentler vibe, you can have them both. Other aspects of your romantic nature are explored on Wednesday when Mercury opposes your Neptune ruler and you see limitless possibilities while fantasizing the creative potential of what is now simply a friendship.

From Ritz To Blitzed, But Lived Through It

This practical, consoling, friendly book is designed for people who thought they'd never need or read such a thing: the surprised-to-be unemployed. Many of the 16 million who were jobless last year are middle-class people, on the sobering downslide from the giddy 80s. They never factored penury into their life's plan, and are unacquainted with the institutions, practices, government-related dealings, or the waters (or church basements) upon which bread is mercifully cast. To keep one's credit, one's spirit, and family esprit-de-corps intact, if possible, Cathy Beyer (whose Texas geologist husband lost his job in the bust), Doris Pike and Loretta McGovern have turned up a wealth (and wealth is what fending off the wolf at the door begins to feel like) of resources to help the newly-insolvent: no-interest loans from non-profit agencies to help pay for fuel, temporary low-cost housing, urban homesteading as a creative way to live, interim medical insurance, student loans, tips on cheap-skateries like using rebuilt replacement parts for your car, the black, white and gray areas regarding unemployment benefits, and names, numbers, and facts about – alas – selling your house quickly. As if a loving friend were by your side, sample letters to creditors and others are also provided. The hurt, shame, and anger of job loss (who hasn't burnt in effigy a dissing ex-employer?) are offset in this book both by reality-checking and by cheer. Budget worksheets and schedule tips help make your "job" of the moment coping – practically and emotionally – with the problems of "no job." This book is a little army of salvation.

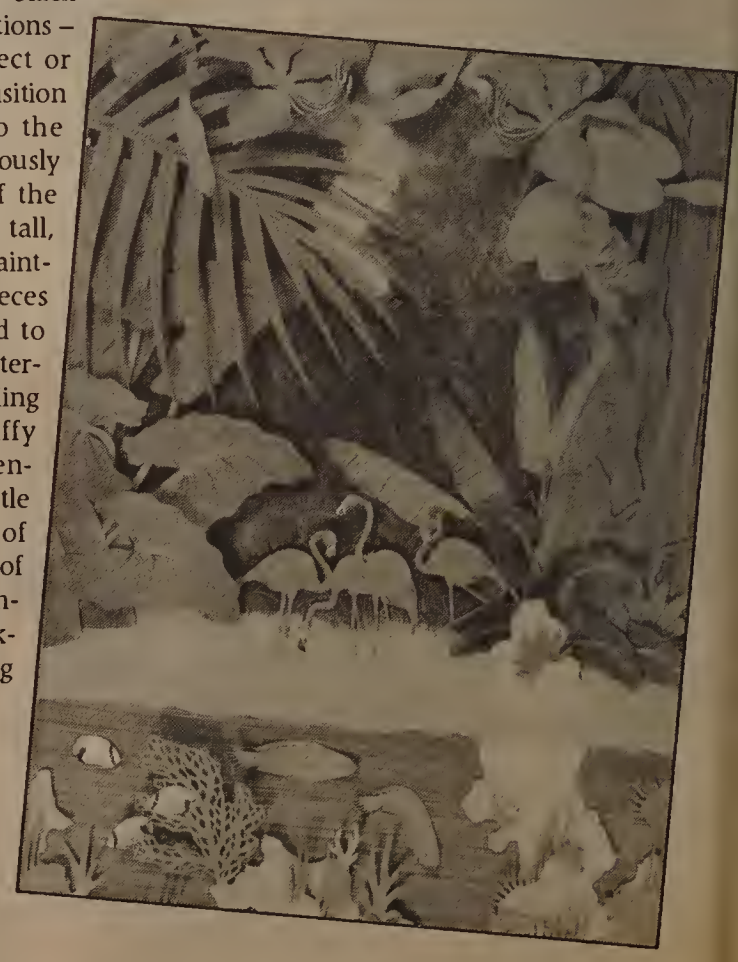
Just Say Know



The Living With Aids Theater Project is a program that a school can import, for 8-10 weeks. During that time, Program Coordinator Lisa Troy inspires and directs students to write and put on a performance, including songs, skits, rap, or whatever it takes, on any and all aspects of the devastating disease of our time. By asking questions – pleadingly, sensitively – high school students, on the cutting edge of AIDS danger and AIDS awareness, are learning while they wonder, and teaching while they perform. In the process, they can become the resident school experts on a subject as denial-ridden as it is compelling. For further information on something they "don't quite want to know," their peers will be able to remember: "Ah yes, Jim knows about condoms and the risk factors." In addition, they may publish, as the Madison Park High School students did, a little magazine of their writings. It is both touching and terrifying to see teen anguish turned to this booming subject, where a date may unwittingly be a double-date with death. The subject is worried in letters, diaries, hortatory credos, dialogues between mother and daughter, and morning-after twistings of terror and guilt ("It's a sunny morning, and last night was a long night...I wonder did I use a condom?" writes Louis Anjos). As they lacerate themselves, they sternly challenge stupidity, protection, carelessness, and the norm of mindlessly saying "Yes" when they should say "No," or "Only with a condom." The tone, both the literary and the emotional, ranges from disbelieving anger (a letter from John Gomes to Magic Johnson says "If I were you I would've bought a solid gold condom, with all the money you make!") to a sort of Supreme's flouncy hand-on-hip song ("Girl, what was you thinking? I know he said he loved you, but love has nothing to do with you dying" from one Shakeyma) to rueful ("And you know what? He broke up with me after he told me he was infected," from Farrah) to mortal sadness ("How have you been? I shouldn't have asked that question, now that I know that you have AIDS.") No subject could be more crucially-right-now. And in a shrinking arts/education environment, kids incidentally get some theater education while doing this project. Call for information on how to get it into your school.

Toys R Crazee!

Some of the adorment fun that hippies had in the 60s is now being had by the kids of today, in this shop of high-spice, richly-colored, painted toys, furniture and charmingly frivolized necessities. It is Susi's (she's the sister of down-the-street Mobilia's Libby) and everything here is the work of artists and craftists. Dripping off the ceiling are the hangy-legged soft sculpture mobiles of Kay Curtis, that sprout as many superfluous decoration-thingies as possible. Susan Baker makes slightly lopsided carved wooden clocks, with painted cats or cows or mermaids smack in the middle. Little black voodoo dolls covered with little crackpot decorations – each with such labels as Love, Desire, Respect or Travel – are among the crossover-to-adult-acquisition things in this store (which really caters to the charmable, shopping "inner child" in a suspiciously large part of the clientele). So does much of the painted furniture by Tatutina,which includes tall, skinny chests of drawers, boxes with brightly painted cats on them, and stand-up decorated pieces with a central window-screen section designed to hold earrings. Don and Lisa Drum's soft dolls (alternately; sofa pillows!) include a playing card King and Queen, from which cascade stuffed puffy hearts. A very practical and adorable piece, parenthesized by carved roosters, will hold a line of little shoes or sneakers. Susi also sells the work of young craftskids in the form of jewelry – signed of course. If this Southwest-colored shoppette stimulates your tyke, you might consider Susi's week-by-week summer arts Mini Camp with rotating activities ($200 per week, through Sept. 7).

JULIET REID

New Kid on Newbury

BY NICOLE L. MILLS

Oh Juliet, Juliet, wherefore art thou Juliet? In the fair, fair, boutique of Verona, of course, to paraphrase the Bard. When Juliet Reid, owner of Newbury Street's newest fashion foray, emerges from the inner office at the back of her store, she looks very well-dressed, very professional, very fashionable, and very, well, young.

The 23-year-old graduate of Brown has already made her mark on Boston's fashion scene with Verona, which opened in February on the first block of Newbury Street. In a city generally condemned for its clothing conservatism, Juliet Reid has found a way to walk the line between youthful hipness and higher-end designer couture.

How did someone who claims laughingly that "like anyone who graduates from college, I was qualified to do absolutely nothing," jump into retail fashion? "I just walked around," she says. "I'm not from Boston, but when I came here, I just walked around, shopping for myself, and I recognized that there was a definite niche in the city that was not being filled. All the stores were either very conservative or very avant-garde, and there was very little in-between. I also thought that Boston needed more service-oriented places."

Newbury Street is not famous for service-oriented boutiques, to be sure. How familiar is it to walk into an upscale Newbury boutique in jeans and a tee-shirt and have the sales help practically turn their backs on you? Reid's whole approach to the mood of her store was to make it as approachable as possible for her clientele. "You have to be dressed up to go into half of these stores," she says. "It's like, will you take my money, please? We've had security problems because we don't want to put buzzers on the doors, because it's just another level of intimidation."

Verona offers a range of designs and prices that don't just cater to the upper-end Newbury Street client, but at the same time, Reid wants people to realize that clothing can be an investment: "Men especially don't understand that – look how much they spend on a stereo, saying 'Can't you hear the quality difference?'" Reid wants her clients to wear the quality difference.

How long does she think she'll be in this business? "As long as we're having fun," she smiles. Naturally. ❑

SANDY MARTIN

Take a Closer Look

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

As the lights in the theater dim, and the crowd falls into a reverent hush, Sandy Martin, the star of "A Closer Walk With Patsy Cline," is backstage "talking" to the spirit of the deceased country singer. "Right before I go out on stage," Sandy says, warning that her ritual may sound a little bizarre, "I ask Patsy to come with me... I ask that she be with me on stage." This moment with her "hero" is complete when Sandy kicks her foot out, twice, and then rubs her palms together for luck.

Six days a week, Sandy transforms herself into the legendary country singer who died in a tragic plane crash at the age of 30. The first time Sandy heard Patsy Cline was on a jukebox in Hawaii. Cline's rich voice was singing "Walking After Midnight" and Sandy recalls being "knocked out" when she heard it. "I don't know why, or what the circumstances were," Sandy says in awe, "but that's when I discovered Patsy." It is those memories and magical feelings of inspiration that are embroidered into Sandy's performance. "When I'm standing on stage," Sandy says as she sits in front of the makeup mirror to begin her metamorphosis into the plucky and shamelessly self-promoting Cline, "I try to imagine what she must have felt like, emotionally... I try to capture her spirit."

After viewing the few performances of Cline that happen to have been captured on video, Sandy says she was surprised at how effortlessly Cline put everything together visually. "She just stood there and the stuff just came out...that was amazing to me."

Although Sandy admits to being "into" Cline for years, she says, emphatically, that she does not try to "become" Cline during her performance. "I go out there and sing," she says as she puts the finishing touches on her face, "I try to capture the essence of her... the audience takes up the rest of the slack... They want me to be Patsy."

Sandy says that she wants the audience to leave the theater with a strong sense of just how special, unique, and incredible Cline's music really was. "If all I do is get one person who has never heard her stuff before, to maybe go out and buy her records," she says, minutes before she is about to walk on stage in full costume, "Then I've done my job." ❑

The Couture War

BEHIND THE FRONT LINE OF LOCAL DESIGN

By Chad L. Sanborn

On the fashion map of the world, certain cities loom out in large letters: Paris, New York, Milan. Boston, a city of tweeds and sensible shoes, is not generally counted among the stars of the fashion and design constellations. But, unbeknownst to a large segment of the local consumer, there is a large and fairly healthy fashion industry stitching its way through Boston. Local designers are generally not household names, but the landscape is shifting, and

Clothing by Denise Hajjar

BOSTON COUTURIERS ARE DOING THEIR DAMNEDEST TO GET THEIR NAMES ON YOUR BACKS.

Boston couturiers are doing their damnedest to get their names on your backs. How? Self-promotion. It is requisite for success in the modern fashion design world. Nobody ever sold so much as a left sock without first promoting the name behind the garment. We are flooded by a deluge of faux-art advertisements targeting the twin human pressure points of sex and status. The best of these hit their mark, triggering a reflex in the prey that concludes with the subtle beep of a cash register.

Many local designers have taken this to heart, practicing "publicity" and "spin" as deftly as if threading a needle. At the heart of the Boston design scene lies a handful of top designers, a lot of ambition, and some publicity-nurturing backstabbing (or is it back-stitching?) At stake on the success of these designers are potential jobs, money and reputations, and not just their own.

The story begins with the Boston Designer's Collaborative, founded in 1990. The BDC was conceived and initiated by local designer Geoffrey B. Small to create a cohesive fashion community in Boston that strategically integrated the industries that make up the overall fashion business. The designers are merely the most visible crest of a local fashion industry that includes modeling agencies, photographers, fabric suppliers, pattern makers, mass production houses, retail stores and other peripheral labor segments that make up Boston's multi-million dollar garment business.

When he founded the BDC, Small was already nationally known, having sold more than $1 million worth of his break-through creation, the GBS Ultimate Shirt, from his garage in Newton during the mid-1980's. But Small, a passionate man whose vast knowledge of fashion history is acknowledged by many of his peers, was looking to avoid the missteps of previous Boston-based designers who, upon carving out a national reputation, had spent the remainder of their careers bobbing up and down in a sea of bankruptcy and the fickle tastes of fashion observers and consumers.

To avoid the fate of these "big fish in a little pond" who failed on a national level, Small learned from their mistakes. He was one of the first local designers to correctly identify the competition as the major international designers, rather than other local designers, noting consumers will "pay full price for international labels but want to haggle with the local guy."

Unable to compete on his own with international retail predators such as design king Giorgio Armani, Small sought strength in numbers, thus establishing the basis for forming the BDC. To reach his self-admitted goal of building an international reputation for himself, from clothes to perfume to global licensing agreements, all without leaving his hometown, he created a forum whereby the rest of Boston's fashion community were to succeed as well. Using as his pattern the success of such designers as Armani and Yves Saint Laurent, each a pioneer in media manipulation to spread their name recognition and thus generate sales, Small and about 30 other designers gave birth to what may be their greatest creation, the BDC.

Its strategies were threefold: first, the BDC established a multi-designer fashion show, something seldom done in Boston at that time, Small says. From this, national and international press coverage would follow.

Second, to increase the sales of local designers' clothes versus well-known international designers, Small initiated the BDC's "Buy Boston Design" campaign, a regional effort similar to the National Garment Worker's Union slogan "Look for The Union Label," as most of the clothes created by Boston designers are produced locally using area suppliers and resources.

And finally, the BDC served as a networking environment for nurturing the alliance between the artistic and business strata of the region's fashion industry.

All evidence points to success on the part of Small and the BDC. As the organization grew to its current membership of more than 100, it expanded its base from including just designers to incorporating other industries and areas associated with the fashion industry. The BDC held its first show in early 1991. Even though described by most of those involved as slightly unorganized and virtually ignored by most of the local press, it was still a success, if only because it proved there was a vibrant design scene in Boston, and other shows soon followed.

Out of all of this came hard-won recognition from the press, consumers, and industry insiders that Boston's fashion creativity was energetic, fresh, and growing. Maybe not yet a force to be reckoned with on a national or international level, but at least Boston was becoming a region to be watched. This heady first success makes it all the more interesting that Small, who withdrew from the BDC earlier this year and formed the design group Creation, now accuses the BDC's current leadership of a moral bankruptcy that he predicts will lead to the demise of the BDC. But, just as the capricious fashion world is built on planned obsolescence, realities and alliances in the fashion world are constantly changing.

After a brief sojourn to the fashion mecca of Paris in the spring of 1992, a trip which Small says convinced him that to succeed globally he must first succeed in the cutting-edge atmosphere of Paris, he announced that he was abdicating his enormous responsibilities as head of the ever-expanding BDC to concentrate on his own designs.

It was during this period, Small says, that he began to sense a straying direction in the expanding BDC, a direction dictated by a triumvirate of Denise Hajjar, a local designer specializing in fashions for professional women, and a few other high-profile designers at the BDC, namely David Josef, a designer of women's fashions with a national reputation who has created designs for Hillary Rodham Clinton, and Daniel Faucher. Small criticizes Hajjar, who was elected president of the BDC in late last year, Josef, and Faucher for what he sees as a manipulation of the BDC for their own self-promotion, and says "We're talking about overall direction and the side issue is that you've got some nasty people [running the BDC] and that's the problem."

Hajjar, speaking for herself and for the BDC, says, "We have no beef with Geoffrey," and suggests that Small himself is trumpeting this schism because he needs publicity.

"THERE'S THIS FEELING OUT THERE, THAT THIS SPLIT IS DESIGNED TO CREATE MORE PRESS – THAT'S NOT WHAT THIS IS ABOUT."

Hajjar is not the only person to suggest this. Almost everyone interviewed for this article, even some of the people referenced by Small to bolster his accusations, at some point added that Small is stirring publicity as a means for selling clothes. Consider the words of Tunji Dada, a Nigerian-born designer based in Boston who's gaining a national reputation for his avant-garde designs. A friend and collaborator of Small's, first at the Boston Designer's Collaborative and now at their new group, Creation, Dada praises Small's efforts on behalf of young designers but nonetheless remains above the fray, saying: "[Boston's design industry] is getting stronger. This is the worst time to have a war because it would totally bring everything back to zero again."

Then again, it just might be Small's next ingenious step in his efforts to promote names, sell clothes and make everyone rich. Citing a "lack of respect for the individual," Small maintains Hajjar's first act as president was to raise membership dues to $100 from $50, without submitting a formal budget stipulating what the additional money was marked for, and adds that "somebody ought to take a look at the books over there."

Hajjar says a budget was a key component of her campaign for the office and counter-charges that Small never presented a budget during his tenure as BDC president. She also notes that the organization has applied with the Internal Revenue Service for non-profit status and during the process, which she says is still pending, the books will be reviewed by that agency's extremely thorough accountants.

Josef also denies Small's accusations and defends the direction of the BDC today: "The BDC hasn't changed so much as it has grown. I wouldn't say there's a different outlook or there's a different way that we're doing things by any means. It's still the same original thought that Geoffrey had to promote Boston fashion to the media. The only thing that's really changed is that the shows have gotten slicker, better, more professional. If you stay the same then you don't have much of an organization."

The BDC's July 1992 fashion show, the largest BDC show ever at that time, was overseen by Hajjar, Josef and Faucher. Small claims that the three of them assumed responsibilities of choosing models for the show, rather than allowing the designers to choose who should wear their clothes, and that they slanted their choices to older models more flattering to their mainstream designs for professionals. Small contends this under-cuts the presentations of more avant-garde designs, requiring younger, thinner, runway-type models.

Although some of Small's colleagues, such as Dada and Nong Tumsutipong, a local avant-garde designer whose work appeared recently in Elle Magazine, agree they would have preferred choosing the models for their clothes, they maintain that there is an element of compromise to any big show. Jay Calderin, a fashion designer/photographer who has worked with Small at BDC and Creation concurs, adding that there's a certain amount of trade-off necessary in collaborations that the steadfast Small finds unacceptable.

"Geoffrey was very strong about people having individuality, to a point that everyone was having their own little show," Calderin says. "It doesn't always work out to be the most practical way of doing things when you have that many people. But I couldn't have afforded to have a show like (the BDC shows) and have my clothes seen by this large amount of people if I had done it on my own. I'd have had it my own way , but not as many people would have seen it."

But amid the accusations, defenses and general disagreement, the general consensus appears to be that the BDC is a success. Earlier this month, the BDC presented its largest fashion show ever, featuring its top-tier designers. They are also planning a jewelry show for August, another fashion show for the fall, and an AIDS benefit, among other projects, and Hajjar says that there are plans to set up a scholarship fund for design students and young start-up designers.

Meanwhile, Small too has broadened the range of his success. His new group, Creation, is a loose confederation of 13 designers, some previously and/or currently associated with the BDC, that focuses on avant-garde designs that might be more at home in Paris than in Boston's conservative fashion market. Small took a giant step along the path towards carving an international name for himself this spring when he became the first Boston designer to present a collection in Paris. Here at home, however, Small is still riled over what he sees as a glaring lack of local media coverage of a nationally-acclaimed Creation show that was presented in May at the World Trade Center in conjunction with the Institute of Contemporary Art's "Suit Yourself" exhibit.

Local media coverage in general is a recurring sore spot for Small, who still believes in the local aspect of "Buy Boston Designs," but at the same time seems to want to carry his message to the world. It is the national and international scope of Small's designs (both in the studio and out) that causes many people to maintain that Small's connection with the BDC and his current lambasting of the BDC and its leadership was simply a vehicle for his own publicity. These same people, however, seem to be ignoring the fact that, by Small's line of thinking, all Boston designers will profit from the exposure. Small maintains the breach of ethics he's witnessed by current BDC leadership needs to be exposed. In the eyes of our media culture, the validity of his accusations becomes irrelevant, and the wholesomeness of his motives immaterial. Even if the unpleasant relations between Boston's top designers is just a masterful publicity ploy, it signifies the vital signs of life in Boston's fashion industry, and cannot help but contribute to the respective success of all the parties involved by introducing them to a less-than-fashion-aware Boston public.

Small continues to deny that he is manipulating the media in any way, either for his benefit or for the benefit of Boston's fashion industry, saying "There's this feeling out there, that this split is designed to create more press – that's not what this is about." He continues emphatically, "It wasn't a ploy to generate more press. It was just Small leaving this thing after these people came in and ripped it off and failed to uphold standards of human behavior. I can't have anything to do with that."

Whether this media-fueled "couture war" is based on valid claims or not, it has caught the attention of local fashion watchers. Now it remains to be seen if the fashion industry in Boston will survive the schism being highlighted by Small. Just maybe, it will do more than simply survive in the stale atmosphere that has been Boston's fashion scene for so long, and actually begin to thrive, beginning a whole new era in Boston design. ◆

As do so many bio pics, Dragon promotes the legend more than it portrays the man, and it keeps up a rushed "and then he...and then he...." pace as music swells to let you know something important is happening. Jason Scott Lee as Bruce Lee (no relation) is a charmer. The kung fu fights are flashy, if bloody, set pieces which propel the story. Above all, the movie is an exposé on racism: Lee watches Mickey Rooney play a buck-toothed Oriental buffoon in Breakfast at Tiffany's; he promotes the idea for the successful t.v. series, Kung Fu, but loses the lead to a Caucasian; Chinese martial arts masters condemn Lee for teaching whites. Ironically, Bruce Lee comes across as an all-American hero. K. Wilson

Ivan Reitman's Capra-esque comedy gleefully sticks it to the Republicans. Kevin Kline is a delight as Dave Kovic, an exuberant, generous, small-town guy who so resembles the President (a mean, tight-assed Yalie) that he becomes his full-time stand-in. Dave's agenda – giving people in need top priority – pits him against Bob, his reptilian Chief of Staff (the wonderful Frank Langella) and allies him with the estranged First Lady (Sigourney Weaver). Like its hero, the film is high-spirited, but it loses its edge and becomes cloying whenever more than one "nice" person is on the screen at a time. Dave is to the Fourth Estate and the Beltway what The Player is to Hollywood. K. Wilson

Life with Mikey

To paraphrase Gertrude Stein: Michael J. Fox is Michael J. Fox is Life With Mikey. A former child t.v. star (Fox) and his older brother (Nathan Lane) run a children's talent agency. The talent is wanting as is the agency. Open auditions produce the same star-wannabes with mothers in tow. The cute, recurring kid-bits underline the brothers' desperation for a meal-ticket talent. Christina Vidal cops a street-smart attitude, Mikey's wallet, and a contract as the Sunburst Cookie girl. She's just what is needed to push the agency to the brink of profitability. The film is pushed to the brink of sappy, but it's saved by Fox's Mikey. Like Fox, Mikey is charming in an off-handed way. So is this movie. T. Miller

A brilliant, beautiful black teenager (Nia Long) and her smart, independent mother (Whoopi Goldberg) discover that the girl's sperm-donor father was not an accomplished black man, but a white yahoo (Ted Danson) who hawks cars on TV. The movie is annoying in spite of a likeable cast. It only superficially explores the question of what makes a family. The animal acts; broad, mostly not-very-funny comic routines; and sentimental scenes would all play better on t.v. But if your idea of a good time is watching a monkey and a trained bear upstage Ted Danson, and an elephant chase bicyclist Whoopi down the streets of San Francisco, by all means, see this movie. K. Wilson

Director Vincent Ward's latest film about an Innuit Eskimo (Jason Scott Lee) and the half-Indian, half-European love of his life (Anne Parillaud), who become caught up in the marvels and the horrors of the white man's world, is a clunker. Big chunks of the movie don't connect; they're like icebergs breaking off from the mainland and floating away. Ward bombards us with images: X-rays and maps appear so often that they lose their meaning; too many show-stopping aerial shots do just that: stop the show and overwhelm the viewer. But better a magnificent clunker than a mediocre "success" any day. K. Wilson

The comparison with Boyz N the Hood is inevitable, except that Boyz gives you reason to hope; Menace doesn't. Twenty-year old directors Allen and Albert Hughes show how one generation passes on to the next a legacy of violent, destructive behavior, emotional numbness, and hopelessness. Caine (Tyrin Turner) is an LA gang member. The son of drug addicts, he saw his father shoot a man to death at home. His friends and family offer him some ways out, but try as he may he can't escape the cycle of violence. The Hughes brothers are talented, and you can see them experimenting and borrowing. Sometimes they hit, sometimes they miss, as in their brief, unsuccessful Spike Lee sex scene. K. Wilson

The opening of director Kenneth Branagh's latest film is full of fun and promise as both men and women prepare themselves for the battle of the sexes. Beatrice (Emma Thompson) and Benedict (Kenneth Branagh) are worthy adversaries, precursors to all the smart, snappy, sexy, big screen couples we love. Hero (Kate Beckinsale) and Claudio (Robert Sean Leonard) are beautiful young lovers. When the vindictive Don John (Keanu Reeves) tricks Claudio into believing his love is a wanton hussy, the battle turns ugly. Finally, all's well that ends well. The movie slows down as the director relies more and more on close-ups to tell the story. K. Wilson

Super Mario Bros.

Two Brooklyn plumbers, Mario (Bob Hoskins) and his younger brother Luigi (John Leguizamo) tumble into Dinohattan, a decaying city in a dying parallel world, inhabited by descendants of the dinosaurs. Their mission: to rescue Daisy (Samantha Mathis), a young paleontologist/princess from the clutches of the lizardly King Koopa (Dennis Hopper). Based on the high-tech Nintendo video game whose heroes are decidedly low-tech, the movie has a bright, cheesy, grungy look and gives you a few cheap thrills. Dinohattan is New York City turned upside down. But this is no Blade Runner or Batman. A dying world and urban decay aren't metaphors; this is a fun-house, not film noire. K. Wilson

The Story of Qui Ju

Zhang Yimou fans may miss the formal elegance of the director's earlier works and the chance to stare into the radiant face of his wonderful actress, Gong Li, whose countenance dominated Ju Dou and Raise the Red Lantern: Qiu Ju is shot in rough, almost documentary-style long shot. When the village mayor refuses to apologize for kicking her husband in the groin, Qiu Ju journeys into the city, to fight her way through China's Byzantine criminal court system. The sublimity of Gong's performance is how one of the world's most sensual actresses disappears into the character and the crude pajama clothes of country woman and people's hero Qiu Ju. G. Peary

Visions of Light

A dizzying paean to a host of ace Hollywood cinematographers, from The Birth of a Nation's Billy Bitzer to Blue Velvet's Frederick Elmes. This wonderful documentary insists that it's the unheralded cameramen who often deserve the real credit for making movies soar as "art." Visions backs up its claim with scene after scene of magisterial visual splendor illustrating the signature talents of various Hollywood cameramen: among others, Lee Garmes, William Daniels, Arthur Miller, Gregg Toland, then, and Caleb Deschanel, Vilmos Zsigsmond, Nestor Almendros, Gordon Willis, now. Do these names register? Only the cinematographers really know, and appreciate each other's work. G. Peary

JURASSIC PARK

"... Forget Character Development. Forget Plot. . . It's the Dinosaurs Who Rule Jurassic Park, and They Are Amazing. . ."

So what's a reviewer to do with a movie that opened to more advance hype and build-up than when the astronauts landed on the moon, a movie that McDonald's uses to push burgers, a movie that makes reviewers utterly superfluous.

What to do? Relax. Eat popcorn. Enjoy the show.

Forget character development. Forget

DINO-MIGHT: A Tyrannosaurus Rex stares down paleontologist Dr. Grant (Sam Neil) and Lex (Ariana Richards)

plot. Even the scary parts – and there are many – don't go over the top. It's the dinosaurs who rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. We come across a gentle Brachiosaurus calmly munching on a tree top and a pack of kangaroo-like dinosaurs fleeing a predator. We get so close to them that we can imagine how they smell and how their scales feel. We hear the thunder of their approach and see standing water ripple at the vibrations their steps make. We feel what it's like to be hunted a cunning, ruthless Velociraptor.

Director Steven Spielberg is a great overgrown kid, and he instills in us his own childlike sense of awe and wonder at these incomprehensibly old and mighty creatures. Because the dinosaurs look real, they become real to us in a way that was never before possible – cartoons, bones, and books notwithstanding. They exist now in our imaginations in relation to us in time and in space.

But wait, there's a message. The scientists (Laura Dern, Sam Neill, and Jeff Goldblum) preach that humankind should not attempt to play God, that we can never have dominion over nature, whose power is awesome and beyond our control – unless, of course, you're a moviemaker like Steven Spielberg.

Jurassic Park is a shrine to technology, and to commercialism, what with its perfectly coordinated marketing and merchandising campaign, each reinforcing the other. (But of course Jurassic Park T-shirts and mugs are on display in the movie; the movie is about a theme park after all, and theme parks sell souvenirs.)

The most entertaining characters are the two most associated with the negative aspects of technology and commercialism. Dennis Nedry (Wayne Knight) is the treacherous, obnoxious computer genius whose desk overflows with clutter and snack foods. Knight immediately taps into a vast reservoir of ill will that has accumulated from his role on t.v.'s Seinfeld (when Knight first appeared, the audience began to buzz: "Newman ...Newman"). Dennis outdoes Newman: he's greedier, whinier, more selfish, and dangerous besides. He's like a breath of foul air. We have Dennis to thank for all hell breaking loose in Jurassic Park.

The character who best captures the commercial spirit of the movie is – surprise – a lawyer. Donald Gennaro's (Martin Ferrero) concerns are strictly bottom-line and his resistance to Jurassic Park disappears the minute he gets a whiff of all the money to be made. He's greedy and insensitive and worse: he's a coward who abandons innocent children to save his own skin. Anybody who wishes lawyers were an extinct species should enjoy what happens to Gennaro. A dinosaur finds him hiding in the bathroom, on the toilet, and quickly turns him into dinosaur food.

None of the other characters hold a candle to these two. If you had never seen Laura Dern or Sam Neill before you would have no idea that these two are fine actors. Jeff Goldblum is a little better, but not much, in spite of having an advantage in the costume department: he plays a black-clad chaos expert with greasy hair and a gold chain. When actors as accomplished as these three are this boring, something is wrong in the directing department. Sir Richard Attenborough, at least, ignites a small spark under his character.

Maybe a few years from now the special effects in Jurassic Park will seem primitive. But we can be sure that Steven Spielberg, the computer wizards, and the marketers will be in the vanguard, bringing us the latest in technology and movie marketing and merchandising techniques. ❑

JACQUOT

"... A Remarkable, Tender, Clear Thinking Testimonial..."

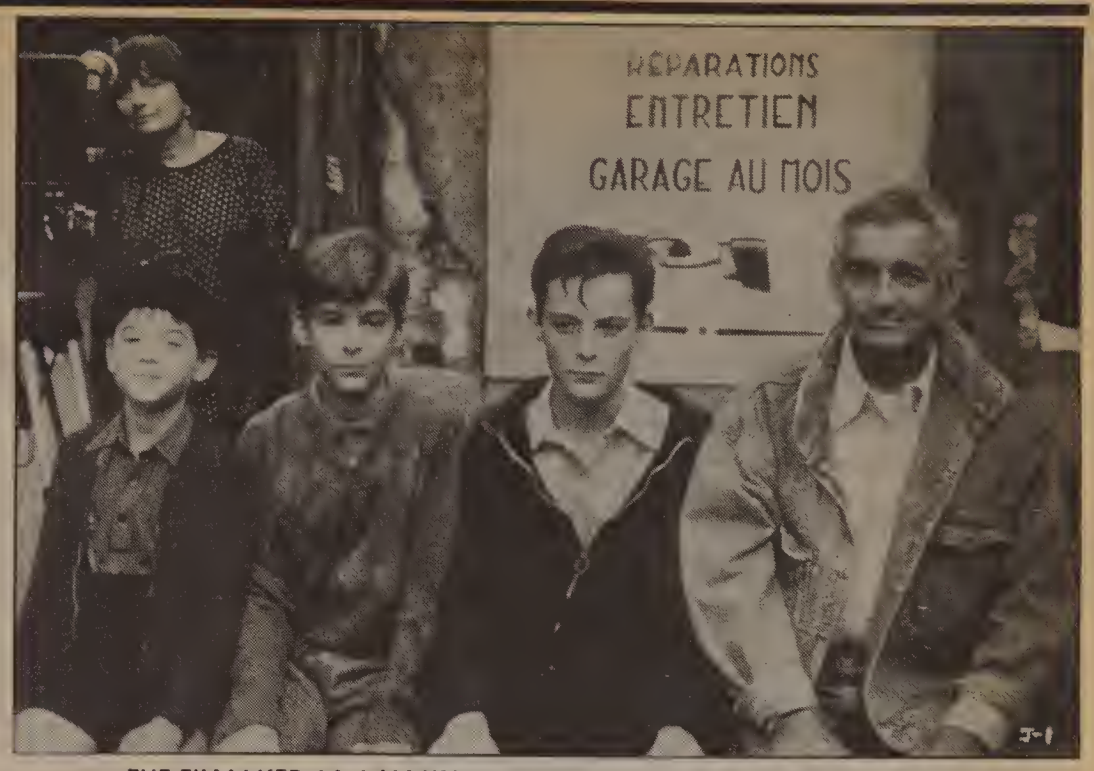
Agnes Varda and Jacques Demy met in Paris in the 1950s, as "Left Bank" documentarians. Married in the early 1960s, they became part of the amazing "New Wave" explosion in France, as a generation of passionate young cineastes – Godard, Truffaut, Chabrol, Rohmer, etc. – directed feature films which were seen, and acclaimed, around the world.

Varda made the first New Wave features directed by a woman: Cleo from 5 to 7, literally two hours of screen time in the life of a Parisian actress who discovers she has cancer, and La Bonheur, a bittersweet tale of a man who lives simultaneously with his wife and his mistress. Demy concocted one-of-a-kind musicals, such as Lola and Donkey Skin, which were old song-and-dance films reconceptualized for provincial France. Demy's operetta, The Umbrellas of Cherbourg, is one of the most beloved French films.

Amazingly, in their entire thirty-year relationship, Varda and Demy never made a film together until their sad swan-song collaboration, Jacquot.

When Demy fell sick in 1989 (whether from cancer or AIDS is unclear) he became obsessed with his childhood in Nantes, in Northwest France, and he wrote down stories about his youth for Varda's benefit. These, with her husband's blessing, she converted into a screen play. As Demy grew increasingly ill, Varda set up shop in Nantes, hired actors to play young "Jacquot" and his family and friends, and began shooting. On days when he was not too weak, Demy would watch the filming and attend the rushes. "He only criticized once," Varda said, because the actor who was playing Demy as a boy did not remove his hat at his grandfather's grave. Out of respect, Varda re-shot the scene. Demy died in October 1990, having approved a mostly-edited version of the film.

No wonder Demy endorsed Jacquot. What a remarkable, tender, clear-thinking testimonial by Varda to her dearly-loved husband and to the films he made. Demonstrating incredible courage, Varda managed to turn her acute depression and impending grief into the stuff of "Art."



The scenes of Demy's early youth are the only bland ones in Jacquot. Even the Nazi invasion of Nantes has little emotional clout. But the film elevates a hundred times when, as a 13-year-old, Jacques discovers "Cinema." There are hilarious episodes when he directs the neighborhood kids in elaborate adventures for his tiny amateur camera. There are sublime scenes in the loft above the Demy family garage, in which the precocious lad builds a mini-world of teensy fairy-tale characters. These he can mold, then patiently photograph, still-frame by still-frame, to create a mighty "stop-action" animation short. For the young Jacquot, movies are born! It's as delicious as young Tom Edison discovering electricity.

But who in the non-intellectual, auto-mechanic Demy family can get excited at having among them a petite film-maker, who toys with little characters as if playing with dolls? Only when adolescent Jacques Demy goes off to Paris at the end of Jacquot is he liberated: the Eiffel Tower! The Arc de Triomphe! Film School! And, eventually, Varda, the love of his life.

Both Demy and Varda are fairly well-represented on video. With Demy, definitely begin with his lyrical Umbrellas of Cherbourg, an all-musical romance about a pregnant, small-town girl (Catherine Deneuve) and the sailor whose return from the sea she awaits. You can't get more heart-thumping than the couple's last meeting in a snowy gas station, and Oh, that score by Michel Legrand! After Umbrellas, graduate to Demy's Donkey Skin, which also stars the dazzling Deneuve. This is a Freudian/Oedipal adult fairy-tale, about a Princess who runs away from her father, the King, who wants to marry her!

For Varda, start with Cleo from 5 to 7, the 1960s first female-directed New Wave film. Move into the 1970s with One Sings, the Other Doesn't, a love poem to the feminist movement and to female friendship. Varda is represented in the 1980s by the grim and potent Vagabond, a harsh story of a teenage runaway, and in the 1990's, by the lovely, gentle Jacquot. ❑

Comedy / Ross Garmil

Mario Joyner: "Funny Person"

". . . Joyner's Philosophy of Comedy is Entertainment Pure and Simple . . ."

HANGIN' LOOSE: Joyner will be appearing at Nick's the 24th and 25th of June

Much like the great works of Arthur Conan Doyle, Agatha Christie, and the guys who wrote "Scooby Doo," all comedians are a great mystery. From "I suppose you're wondering why I called you all here tonight" to "I would've gotten away with it, too, if it weren't for you meddling kids," the solution to the mystery is sought by all the characters involved as well as all the readers (or viewers, as it were) until the final resounding finale. (That's why they call it finale; you see the word finale comes from the word final. Or maybe it's the other way around. No matter, at the end everyone knows all the answers they seek. Except, of course, for the one never answered question: what's the deal with Fred and Daphne?)

The one great discrepancy between comedians like Mario Joyner and "Scooby Doo" episodes like the case of the haunted mine (in which the owner of the abandoned amusement park tried to scare everyone off the land), an audience does not learn the solution to the great mystery of the comedian by the end. Sure, they're presented with a great show, they have a lot of laughs, but just how much do they know after walking away from a comedy show, even one of the high caliber presented by a talent the likes of Mario Joyner?

The answer, put simply, is not very much. And that's how it should be. Comedians are entertainers, period. Figuring out each comedian's particular philosophy of entertainment, which then determines their brand of comedy, is mystery enough. Joyner's philosophy is fairly simple: "Comedians have little ideas that we write down and we say them in front of people." Yes, Joyner's philosophy of comedy is entertainment pure and simple. No politics, no self-preaching; he does not use the comedy stage as a pulpit.

Joyner also shies away from the modern day label of black comic (or of woman comic, for that matter). He states that his one goal on stage is to be "a funny comedian, or no comedian at all." Whether as the host of MTV's "Half-Hour Comedy Hour," where he speculates that as host "I'm not there to make my material the number one thing, I'm concerned with just having the show run well" or headlining a show of his own, Joyner asserts that "I just want to be a funny person." Joyner's purpose within comedy is to make everyone within the club laugh, to appeal to a "broad audience."

He achieves this goal by presenting the audience with observational humor: "I want you to be able to see what I saw, and see that I saw it funny." He keeps up on current events, for example his musings on the movie, Indecent Proposal, where he ponders "Somebody offers you $1 million to have sex, that sounds like a pretty decent proposal to me. Even if you turn the offer down, you have to give the man his due." Joyner uses these current events to not only entertain, but to also keep in practice. "Those come and go," he explains, "but they keep the muscle strong."

Joyner describes his style as laid back, but reminds that his comedy can be aggressive when the audience fails to respond. "You stick the baby food in the baby's mouth," Joyner metaphors, "and he doesn't want to eat, but you know he has to eat, or he will not live." In general, however, Joyner finds this to be unnecessary; he enjoys the material, as does the audience. And in the end, everybody knows why he called them all there that night, to have a good time. ❑

Theater Review / Nancy Leonard

ORPHÉE

". . .The Action Proceeds As the Simple Telling of an Old Story, Without Fresh Insight or Allure. . ."

The world premiere of "Orphée," an opera in two acts by Philip Glass at the American Repertory Theatre, is a stylized but unremarkable work. Based on Jean Cocteau's 1949 film of the same name, which freely modernized the Orpheus legend to serve various authorial purposes, the opera utilizes the French text of the film and makes only slight changes in the settings to suit the stage.

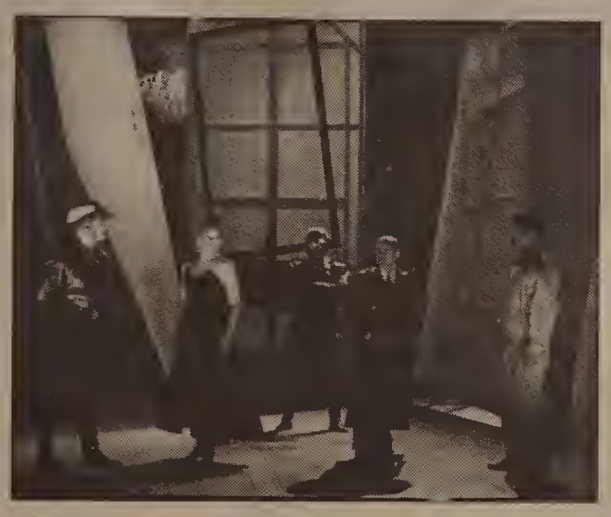
It isn't necessary to be familiar with the cinematic original, since the ART has supplied English subtitles and a synopsis of the action. Still, the musicalization should be a point of note, preferably one of dramatic enchantment. Here, however, the music is so recessive that it's almost unheard in the background, as the action proceeds along its tautly-plotted, uninvolving way.

When the young poet Cégeste is killed in an offstage motorcycle accident, and his body is taken away by a mysterious Princess, Orphée becomes entranced with this figure of Death. She gives him a radio, over which the dead Cégeste broadcasts coded messages to inspire new poetic triumphs. Fixated on the radio, Orphée ignores his pregnant wife Eurydice, who becomes another victim of the Princess.

Though he seemed not to care much for his wife - her conventionality making her hardly a poet's soulmate - Orphée jumps at the chance to find Eurydice in Death's realm. In the company of the Princess' chauffeur, Heurtebise, he dons red gloves and passes through the mirrors which lead to no-man's land and beyond. There it is judged that the wife can return to her husband, providing he does not look at her again.

This mocks their marriage, and proves impossible. Eurydice is taken away once again, and Orphée is soon killed by an angry crowd. But the Princess, who swore she would find a way to be with him forever, has a change of heart. She orders her henchmen to kill the dead Orphée, so he can be restored to life. He awakens in his bed beside Eurydice, with no memory of the recent events.

Under Francesca Zambello's direction, the production is taut, artistically coherent, and nicely paced. It's played in a stylized manner that's stiff for drama but maybe not so for opera. The problem is that the evening is only modestly interesting. The action proceeds as the simple telling of an old story, without fresh insight or allure. There is nothing tantalizing in Cocteau's enigmas, or in the attraction between Orphée and the Princess.



Glass' low-key, whirring score seems musically astute and has recognizable aspects, but hardly drives the action. Only in the trial segment does the music assert itself enough to suggest the poet's dangerous love. The score could create the missing emotion and involvement, but serves as mere underpinning, and often diminishes to the point where it's not actively heard. Though the dialogue is sung, its reading and hearing make it feel spoken.

In Robert Israel's set design, the various locations are abstractly defined by blank canvas flats, moving on casters across the stage. Catherine Zuber's black and white costumes are 1950-ish contemporary. The lighting by Pat Collins is cold and dim for the most part, with yellow spots glaring into the audience for scene changes.

The opening-night performers had pleasing voices but sang with little drama. Eugene Perry was an oddly restrained Orphée, both vocally and dramatically, so it was hard to relate to his obsession. As the Princess, Wendy Hill's imperious gloss was somewhat stiff, but more dramatically suggestive. Her rich voice added much luster, though faltering near the end.

Elizabeth Futral marked Eurydice with a sweet soprano and a more relaxed manner. Richard Fracker brought middle-aged authority to Hertebise, and Paul Kirby a youthful brashness to Cégeste. Martin Goldray directed the chamber orchestra with quick precision.

Bound by Cocteau's script, Philip Glass has not mined the dark supernatural recesses or created much of a musical presence. What you see and hear in his "Orphée" is about what you get. ❑

Fashion's Five Commandments

"I need timeless fashion tips. I need rules I can always count on and constantly refer to in an easy-to-understand format taped to my closet door."

I admit it: I'm not exactly on the cutting edge of fashion. Truth is, I'm not even on the big-fat-wooden handle of fashion, but all that's changing now that I've gone to a Fashion Consultant.

Sure, laugh it up, all you macho, body-by-Budweiser guys who spend your Saturday nights yelling "Go Jimmy!" at any of 14 TV screens in your favorite sports baaa, but this is The Nineties: men wash dishes; men cry in public; and more and more men are going to fashion consultants. At least, that's what the "Color-Me-Beautiful" Lady said while trying to sell me the fashion consultation, as well as the eye-shadow, high heels, assorted lipstick set, three packs of "Lee Press-On Nails," and a lifetime supply of feminine hygiene products. (I held out on the heels).

By her recommendation, I've also started reading GQ and other fashion magazines to help keep up with the trends. But what I've finally realized—other than the fact that fashion magazines are made up of 97 percent perfumed advertisements and three percent unperfumed advertisements—is that I can't possibly keep up with all of the fashion trends: Before I finish sniffing even the first few pages of a magazine, the trends have already changed.

I need timeless fashion tips. I need rules I can always count on and constantly refer to in an easy-to-understand format taped to my closet door. Well, here they are—due to popular demand by me, straight from the ultra-chic pedestrians of Newbury Street—five Fashion Command-ments that should never, NEVER, be broken. (Unless you want these five particular people laughing at you.)

Fashion Commandment #1: NEVER Wear Plaid On Plaid, On Plaid On Plaid On Plaid. This helpful tip comes from my housemate Paul, who wasn't actually on Newbury Street when he said it—but easily could have been, had he not been eating breakfast across the table from me, and had I not been given only one day to do all my interviews and write this column. And although Paul doesn't particularly agree with this rule, he assured me that it is in fact legitimate, and would I just shut up so he could eat his breakfast.

Fashion Commandment #2: NEVER EVER EVER Wear White Before Memorial Day OR—Heaven forbid—after Labor Day. This tip also comes from my housemate Paul, who's still not on Newbury Street, and will now be finishing his breakfast in his bedroom with the door locked. But, once again, as far as the legitimacy of this tip goes, he assured me that I had better not try to come in.

Fashion Commandment #3 comes from my co-worker Jackie Giron, who, incidentally, was nowhere near Newbury Street when we spoke, but is definitely qualified to give fashion tips in that she's conveniently located at the desk next to mine. When asked for a timeless fashion faux pas, she came up with, off the top of her head: NEVER Wear A Tie That Looks Anything Like The Tie You Have On. Which was really funny at the time. To her. And all my other co-workers. She was, of course, kidding, because the tie I had on happened to be exceptionally cool—yellow and brown spots on a purple background. (It's cooler than it sounds.) So then I asked her for a Real Fashion Commandment and she said: "No, really."

But then both Jackie and other-very-qualified-to-give-fashion-rules-co-worker Catherine yelled out the REAL Fashion Commandment #3: (for men only) NEVER Wear Any Kind Of Sneakers With Any Kind Of Suit. Ever. Not on the T. Not in the office lobby. Not in the privacy of your own home. When I asked about the double standard—why Fashion Command-ment #3 only applied to men—I got bombarded with: "Oh ya! You try wearing high heels! You try giving birth! You try having your period! You try bitching and moaning seven days a week, 52 weeks a year!" (OK, I threw that last one in myself.)

Which (quickly) brings us up to Fashion Commandment #4 from John, another co-worker, who really was on Newbury Street! (OK I lied.) But he did offer these two insightful and highly-convenient-for-me fashion rules: One, Burn All Ties That Look Like The One You're Wearing, (like Jackie didn't tell him to say that), and two, DON'T EVEN THINK ABOUT Wearing Socks With Sandals. His Pastor Kapka used to get away with it, but he had God on his side.

And finally, on the way home from work, I received Fashion Commandment #5 from Yasmina, the attractive cashier at CVS on Boylston Street—a mere 800 feet from actual ultra-chic people actually on Newbury Street. Yasmina said: Never Wear Earrings In Your Lip, because not only does it look stupid, but, she imagines, it must also be very painful. Note that at no time in our conversation did Yasmina so much as mention my apparently horrendous looking tie, which I had taken off hours ago, crumpled up, and hid in the very bottom of my work bag. I'm sure my Dad will enjoy it for Father's Day. ❑

IMPROPER BOSTON

Don't Get Lost In BOSTON

We'd like to introduce you to our new Proper Boston map.

Designed specifically to help you get in and around our fair city.

To help you find your way there, and back.

We've added keyed designates in our listings and our features, all of which correspond to map coordinates. So follow the codes, and find your way there with ease.

And the next time you get lost, pick up an Improper. We'll show you the way to where you want to go.

DANCE

JACOB'S PILLOW
Becket, MA
The annual Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is here again – 12 weeks of dancing, workshops, conferences and more. The Ralph Lemon Company performs June 25-27 in the Studio/Theater and will premiere three new works. Philadanco, Philadelphia's premier modern dance company, performs June 24-26 in the Ted Shawn Theatre. Los Angeles' Jazz Tap Ensemble comes to the Shawn Theatre June 29-July 3. Call (413) 243-0745 for more details.

STRAND THEATRE
543 Columbia Road, Dorchester
Dance Umbrella presents a jazz, tap and hip-hop dance festival June 24 at 7 p.m. and June 25 & 26 at 8 p.m. Enjoy tap dancer extraordinaire Savion Glover (star of the Broadway smash "Jelly's Last Jam," with Gregory Hines) and Rock Steady Crew, one of New York's original hip-hop dance groups. Call 282-5230.

PHOTOGRAPHY

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
Copley Square
With June comes a slew of weddings, some of which are chronicled in "For Better, For Worse: The Contemporary Wedding," through June 29. Featured are photographs of seven weddings by seven Boston-area photographers.

FRENCH LIBRARY
53 Marlborough St.
Take a cheap trip to France when you view "Summer Sojourn," images of France by Michael Berger. On display through July 30. The exhibit is free. Call 266-4351 for more details.

PHOTOGRAPHIC RESOURCE CENTER
602 Commonwealth Ave.
To usher in the new season, the PRC presents John Weiss' "The Face of Baseball," which features fantastic photographs of the players, the fans, the equipment and the ballparks. It runs through July 30. Call 353-0700.

TOURS

BOSTON HELICOPTER COMPANY
Hanscom Field, Bedford
Imagine a perfect aerial view of metro Boston, including Fenway Park, Cambridge, MIT, BU, Harvard, Northeastern, Bunker Hill monument and the Charles River – all seen while you circle overhead. Bring your camera and capture the beauty of New England in a one-of-a-kind adventure: a helicopter tour. Call 274-1230 for details.

ART AND ARCHITECTURE TOURS OF THE BPL
Boston Public Library, Copley Square
From the original, classically-designed wing of the BPL to the modern one, these guided tours are fascinating – and free. Mon., 2:30 p.m.; Tues.-Wed. 6:30 p.m.; Thurs. and Sat. at 11 a.m.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
For you star-gazers out there, the BU Astronomy Department hosts open observatory nights at 8:30 p.m. every Wednesday that's clear. Call 353-2630 if the weather looks questionable. Entrance is at 705 Comm. Ave., take the elevator to the fifth floor.

GARDEN IN THE WOODS
180 Hemenway Road, Framingham
GW is the largest landscaped collection of wildflowers in the Northeast, and its staff offers guided walks every Tues., Fri. and Sat. at 10 a.m. through Oct. 31. Or, come in and explore the garden yourself. Cost is $6. Call (508) 877-6574.

GORE PLACE
52 Gore St., Waltham
Come see New England's largest federal mansion, built in 1806 for the state's seventh governor, Christopher Gore. The mansion is located on a 45 acre estate of lawns, gardens, woodlands and farm fields with a flock of sheep. Guided tours run through Nov. 15. Call 894-2798.

NICHOLS HOUSE MUSEUM
55 Mt. Vernon St.
The Nichols House Museum offers a unique glimpse into 19th- and early 20th-century life in Boston's Historic Beacon Hill District. This impressive four-story townhouse was constructed in 1804, when Yankee fortunes were being amassed through mercantile trading. Call for tour times: 227-6993.

ODYSSEY CRUISES
Rowes Wharf, Boston
This new luxury dinner-cruise line recently opened to compete with the Spirit of Boston ship. Cruise historic Boston Harbor while you choose lunch, brunch or dinner from a menu prepared by an internationally-recognized chef. Call 654-9700 for reservations.

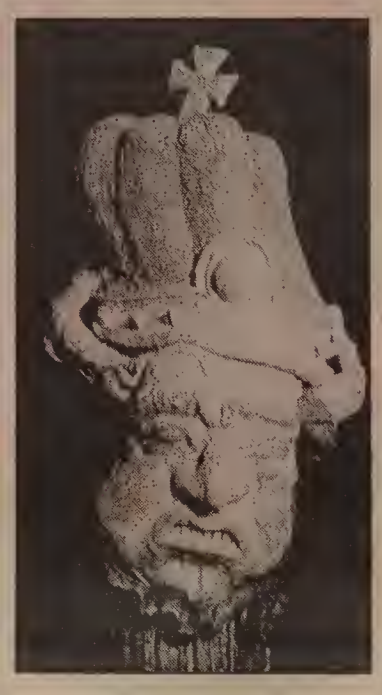
TWILIGHT MYSTERY TOUR
Explore Boston's darker side as you delve into both the solved and unsolved crimes of this city's sinister past – this 90-minute tour will take you right to the scene of the crime. Call 542-2525 for all the gory details.

MUSEUMS

COMPUTER MUSEUM
300 Congress St.
Through Sept. 6, the museum explores "From Words to Code: How People Make Computers Work," a light-hearted, interactive journey into a "land of languages." Also through Sept. 6 is "First Impressions: Digital Photography," an exhibit that allows visitors to dabble in digital paint. See R2-D2 from Star Wars in the new exhibit "Robots & Other Smart Machines." Enjoy over 100 interactive exhibits, including the award-winning Walk-Through Computer. For more details, call 423-6758.

DANFORTH MUSEUM OF ART
123 Union Ave., Framingham
The Danforth shows work by American women artists of the 1920s-30s through June 20. Call (508) 620-0050.



FRANKLIN PARK ZOO
Franklin Park
Now that the weather is warm, you can enjoy both outdoor and indoor exhibits: the brand-new African Tropical Forest (leopards and gorillas), the House of Birds and the Hooves and Horns area, with zebras, llamas, horned sheep, deer and camels! Admission is only $5.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY ART MUSEUMS
32 Quincy St., Cambridge
The Busch-Resinger Museum (Northern and Central European art), the Fogg Art Museum (European and American art) and the Arthur M. Sackler Museum (ancient and Asian art) comprise Harvard's art museums. Call 495-9400 for info.

HIGGINS ARMORY MUSEUM
100 Barber Ave., Worcester
The Armory is the only institution in the Western Hemisphere solely dedicated to arms and armor. Call (508) 853-6015 for hours and admission prices.

INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART
955 Boylston St.
This museum exhibits and presents contemporary art in all media, including photography, painting, sculpture and special installations such as performance art, film, music and video. Call 266-5151 for more information. The ICA has free admission Thursdays from 5-9 p.m.

ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER MUSEUM
280 The Fenway
Come see the permanent exhibit of primarily early Italian and Renaissance pieces at the museum. Fashioned after a 15th century Venetian palace, the Gardner holds one of the most eclectic art collections in Boston and features a quaint and open courtyard. Call 566-1401 for more information.

IMPROPER PICK

KING ME: Chess is the subject matter of the first exhibit at the new Absinth Gallery, 215 Hanover Street. Stephen Yaffee has created a sculpted chess set full of weird and wonderful pawns and knights. Gallery hours are Tues.-Sun., noon-11 p.m. Call 248-6962.

JOHN F. KENNEDY LIBRARY AND MUSEUM
Columbia Point
This museum focuses on the political career and family heritage of President John F. Kennedy. Also, see the White House exhibition – an amazingly detailed 50' by 25' replica of the building celebrating its 200th birthday. Now you can take a water shuttle from Long Wharf (Quincy Market) to the museum. For more information call 929-4523.

MIT MUSEUM
265 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
For only a $2 donation, visitors can explore many wonderful exhibits that you don't have to be a rocket scientist to appreciate. First, there's "Crazy After Calculus: Humor at MIT," which chronicles some of the best college pranks ever committed. For the more science-minded, there's "MathSpace," a hands-on exploration of geometry that lets you tinker with math playthings.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave.
Approximately 125 of the museum's finest watercolors will be presented through Aug. 15 in "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." On view through Aug. 1 is John Singleton Copley's "Watson and Shark," the two large versions of his famous shark attack painting. MFA's new textile gallery is now open, featuring "From Arts and Crafts to Art Deco" through Aug. 29. MFA also presents "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Parts I & II"; part one through July 4 and part two until September. Call 267-9300.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Science Park
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (25 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle — all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. Call 589-0270.

MUSEUM OF TRANSPORTATION
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Musde Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. Call 522-6547 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM
Central Wharf
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious—and dangerous—sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND SPORTS MUSEUM
Cambridgeside Galleria, Cambridge
The Sox last won the World Series in 1918 - ancient history, huh? Well, it's actually not that long ago in the scope of the NESM. This place has everything that has anything to do with New England sports, including lots of interactive exhibits - like one where you can catch a pitch thrown by Roger Clemens. The best thing is that it's open the same hours as the mall, so you can go on a weeknight and have the place all to yourself.

OLD STATE HOUSE
206 Washington St.
This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

PAUL REVERE HOUSE
19 North Square
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338 for more information.

THE USS CONSTITUTION MUSEUM
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

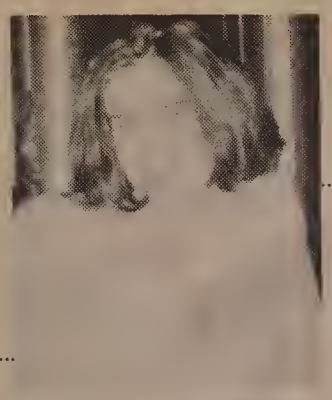
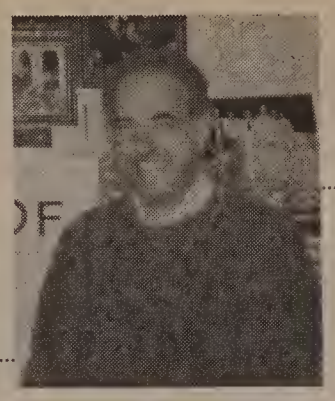
WOMAN ON THE STREET

"Nobody knows..."



BY LESLIE

Amy, 24, Brighton
"Nobody knows I soak my feet in the toilet when it's hot outside."



T.J., 28, Fenway
"I raise hamsters for laboratory reproduction experiments."

Rebecca, 20, Boston
"Nobody knows how ugly I was in 7th grade."

Alexis, 34, Milton
"Nobody knows I am really 5'4", except maybe the Registry of Motor Vehicles."

Raymond, 56, Arlington
"As a restaurant owner, everybody always wants to know where I go for dinner. I never tell..."

Leslie, 24, Newton
"Nobody knows my true hair color."

THEATER

AMERICAN REPERTORY THEATRE
Loeb Drama Center
64 Brattle St., Cambridge
Elaine Stritch stars in the world premiere of Cakewalk, a semi-autobiographical work by Peter Feibleman about his turbulent, 40-year relationship with playwright Lillian Hellman (The Children's Hour). Runs through July 17. Concurrently, the ART stages Philip Glass' opera Orphée. Call 547-8300 for more information.

AMERICAN REPERTORY THEATRE
Zero Church Street, Cambridge
A special workshop presentation of Shakespeare's tragedy Macbeth will be performed June 24-July 11. So, get Out, Out (Brief Spot) and see it!

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
76 Warrenton St.
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work. A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912 for times and ticket prices.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
74 Warrenton St.
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, Shear Madness is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. Set in the city in which it plays, Shear Madness allows the audience to become sleuths and solve the murder mystery. Call 426-5225 for times and ticket prices.

COLONIAL THEATRE
106 Boylston St., Boston
Richard Chamberlain stars in Lerner & Loewe's classic musical My Fair Lady through June 27. It's about a young Cockney girl and the man who must teach her some manners - and how to speak English "properly." Call 931-2787 for times and ticket information.

DELVENA THEATER COMPANY
Old Salem Town Hall
32 Derby Square, Salem
A nun accused of murdering her child is the shocking premise behind the powerful play Agnes of God. The DTC performs this work June 25 & 26, July 2 & 3 and 9 & 10 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10; $7 for students and seniors. Call 643-9993 for more details.

FRENCH'S OPERA HOUSE
45 Fairmount Ave., Hyde Park
The Riverside Theatre Works Co. presents Broadway Legends, which is basically exactly what it sounds like, June 25 & 26 at 8 p.m. Call 361-7024 for reservations.

KENDALL CAFE
233 Cardinal Medeiros Ave., Cambridge
Well, it sounds kinky to us: Steps Theater Company presents The Throb of Life, an ongoing, continuing radio drama for adults only. Admission is $7; calf 499-9580 for reservations and information.

LYRIC STAGE
140 Clarendon St.
Renowned actor Nehemiah Persoff performs his award-winning one-man show, Tales of Sholem Aleichem, through June 27. Enjoy some of the most charming, wise and humorously touching stories about Eastern European Jewish life in the last century. Call 437-7172 for times and ticket information.

246 E. Berkeley St.
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of "Dark Ages" dining, this satiric musical transports its audience back to a comedic castle cabaret. There is no silverware for the six-course meal, customers have to raise their hands to leave the room, and everyone must pay homage to the king. Call 423-4900 for times and ticket prices.

MYSTERY CAFE
290 Congress St.
To celebrate its 5th year, the Mystery Cafe presents Murder at Rick's Cafe and Let's Kill the Boss. Tickets, which include a four course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

NORTH SHORE MUSIC THEATRE
62 Dunham Road, Beverly
Los Angeles comes to Beverly as the NSMT presents City of Angels, a winner of six Tony awards, including best musical. Stars John James (of Dynasty fame) and runs June 24-July 10. Call (508) 922-8500 for times and ticket information.

OUT OF THE BLUE
Back Alley Theater
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
A shipwreck leads to love, mistaken identities and, well, cross-dressing in Shakespeare's romantic comedy Twelfth Night, performed through June 26. Shows are Thurs.-Sun. at 8 p.m. and there is a 4 p.m. matinee June 26. Call 576-1253 for more information.

TERRACE ROOM
Park Plaza Hotel
Forever Plaid, a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St.
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this summer will be for Miss Saigon the tragic love story of an American G.I. and the native woman he left in Vietnam. It's a must-see. Call 931-2222 for times and ticket prices. Performances begin July 14.

WORKSHOPS

CENTER FOR SOCIAL THERAPY
25 Huntington Ave. Suite 328, Boston
The CST presents a "Stop Abusive Behavior Workshop" June 26 from 1-3 p.m.; the workshop will deal with verbal, physical, sexual and substance abuse situations. Cost is $18.

TIME IN A BOTTLE

"... The Subtle Mysteries of a Well Aged Wine... Are Rare and Exquisite Pleasures..."

Mature? When I was a lad undergoing elevage, it was a word I overheard the girls use, usually in the negative, and often in reference to my behavior. Little did I suspect it might also describe something you could buy in a bottle.

Now, however, savoring and discussing with a friend the subtle mysteries of a well-aged wine over dinner are for me rare and exquisite pleasures. As with people though, maturity may be one of those things which is easier to recognize than to define. It is also inescapably in the eye of the beholder. One thing is clear: on few subjects relating to wine is there more general curiosity and at the same time so much mythical nonsense which finds its way into print.

Older wine is, if nothing else, an acquired taste. While some novices will gladly spend whatever it takes to have "the best," their range of tasting experience unfortunately may not have prepared them to appreciate the many dimensions of what they are drinking. Speaking from my own personal experience, this can cause frustration, disappointment, and, in some cases, bizarre conspiratorial fantasies.

Among all the wines of the world, surprisingly few have the capacity to improve in the bottle. This is partly because it takes the noblest of elite grape varieties grown in certain circumstances to provide suitable raw material for age-worthiness, but more importantly because of the way most wines are produced.

To simplify a rather complex matter, most contemporary wines come into being in an atmosphere of virtual exclusion from oxygen. Fermentation occurs in sealed containers at a controlled, usually cool temperature, and the wine is then held and processed in tanks which prevent contact with air. Wines made this way show fresh fruit aromas and clean direct flavor. They are appealing when young, soon after their release to the market .

Some wines, however, receive a carefully-controlled aeration before bottling. During the course of winery operations, small quantities of oxygen enter the oak containers, where they rest aging and dissolve in the wine. This precious but minuscule hoard of oxygen in solution is a crucial factor, permitting change and development over many years in the bottle.

On the other hand, excessive air contact will set spoilage mechanisms in motion almost immediately. The more skillfully the wine maker walks this tightrope between not enough and too much oxygen exposure to fit the personality of the grapes he is using will help determine the wine's age-worthiness. Some wines can absorb, and in fact require, more oxygen than others to reach their full potential.

Once bottled, contact with even trace amounts of air can ruin a wine. Sound corks provide almost absolute security as long as they remain moist and their elasticity is maintained.

Assuming that the wine has been suitably made and the cork is functioning, what goes on inside the bottle? As the stored oxygen comes out of solution, it reacts chemically with the wine's tannins, acids, and alcohol, combining into larger, more complex molecules. The amount of "free" oxygen is slowly reduced; the other components of the wine consume it, causing the familiar scents and textures of bottle age to begin forming. Flavors soften, perceptions of acid and bitterness diminish, color fades, and a wonderful symphony of aromas starts tuning up.

Events taking place outside the bottle now determine how well the wine may continue to evolve. Excessive heat speeds up the chemical processes and can cause imbalance by encouraging transformations to take place at a much faster than desirable rate. Pressure may build up; as the wine tries to expand it can dislodge the cork, gradually pushing it upward and allowing air to enter the bottle along its sides.

Which wines show the best potential for long-term cellaring? If you are interested enough to want to find a rewarding candidate, your best resource is a knowledgeable retailer with a cool humid cellar. Be forewarned though: wines aged oxidatively in oak and then left undisturbed in the bottle while their components harmonize over the years are invariably more expensive. Why does it have to be that way? Anyone even slightly mature would understand. ❑

DANCING ON THE ROOF

The Ritz-Carlton is reopening their old rooftop restaurant. The restaurant first opened in 1933 after Prohibition ended and for thirteen years entertained Bostonians with dining and dancing to the likes of Tommy Dorcey and Benny Goodman. The rooftop restaurant will be open Friday and Saturday evenings, 6 p.m.-1 a.m., and has an admission charge of $10. The Dick Johnson Swing Shift band will entertain and a full menu of seasonal specialties will be offered. So dance the night away on the roof at the Ritz. Call 536-5700 for information and reservations. P.S. Dress - the traditional Ritz-Carlton dress code.

JUICY DETAILS

Lydia Shire and Susan Regis recently flew out to California for a surprise birthday party for Robert Mondavi. Guests at the gala included California governor Pete Williams, Francis Ford Coppola, and Burgess Meredith. Marais welcomes a new pastry chef, Ron Hively, formerly of Delphin's Gourmandise in Marblehead. A sous chef at one of the highly publicized gang of four restaurants has been scouting around looking at a certain Brookline restaurant location. The Cafe Promenade at the Colonade Hotel has opened their outdoor cafe and has the same menu that Chef Grandon offers inside. Chef Andree Robert of Maison Robert has returned from a visit to Provence and introduced a lighter, simpler summer menu filled with those wonderful Provencale flavors. The Peacock Restaurant in Cambridge has gone completely smoke-free. ❑

Blues and Spice and Everything Nice

"There are still some great outdoor shows this summer. . . Bringing the flavor of the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival to New England"

The Concerts on the Common series may be gone, but there are still some great outdoor shows in town this summer. And the series that's closest to Concerts on the Common in name talent is free! Just stop by Copley Square Park Thursdays at 5:30 p.m. for the WBOS-FM Earthwatch concert series, which includes such national attractions as John Sebastian (June 24), the Judybats (July I), Leon Russell (July 8) and Zachary Richard (July 15).

And speaking of the Judybats, their co-headliner may soon be making national waves beyond New England as well. In fact, singer-songwriter Ellis Paul (voted Outstanding New Folk/Acoustic Artist at this year's Pepsi Boston Music Awards) will be returning to local action on the heels of a trip down South, where he will play the Birmingham City Stages festival. Paul returns for two shows at Passim in Cambridge June 25 prior to his Earthwatch set.

Paul, whose debut album "Say Anything" is out on local Black Wolf Records, says of his Music Awards gig, "I felt really lucky to win, but the greatest thing was to get to play the Wang Center. It was surreal, hanging backstage with Aerosmith and rap artists and cleavage and big hair."

Big hair and cleavage aside, the 28-year-old Paul says "I don't want to be huge. I just want to be known as a good songwriter. I can be happy doing this the grassroots way, the same as Bill Morrissey, Patty Larkin and John Gorka have built their audiences."

His distinctive high, lonesome voice showcases the sensitive insights in songs such as "Angel," about a kid caught up in the inner-city drug culture. Paul relates the song back to three years he spent as a social worker in Jamaica Plain working with troubled youths, saying, "My songs are based on real life, but I was never one to set an idea in my head and write about it. It's more in my subconscious. I never said `I'm going to write a song about the inner city'."

ELSEWHERE

When it comes to outdoor summer fun, people who enjoy roots music won't find a better time than the annual Big Easy Bash at the Stepping Stone Ranch in rural Escoheag, R.I. Bringing the flavor of the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival to New England (there's only one stage, but plenty of good eats), the Big Easy Bash features sassy Charmaine Neville, zydeco king John Delafose and blues guitar upstart Sue Foley, as well as smorgasbord band Brave Combo, Tex-Mex folkie Tish Hinojosa, the Cajun-spiced Basin Brothers and swamp-beat boogiers the Sundogs. The festival runs June 26 – 27. (Call 401-351-6312 for information.)

Other recommendations: warm up your dance steps for the Cajun/Bluegrass Festival at the ranch on Labor Day by stopping by Johnny D's Uptown in Somerville on Mondays for Krewe de Roux and Cajun dance lessons or walk on the darker modern rock side with vitriolic P.J. Harvey at Avalon June 25 and The The (with ex-Treat Her Right guy Jim Fitting on harmonica) at Great Woods June 26. ❑

Alternative Americana

A Round-up of Classical CD's to Refresh Your July Fourth

We sit on our coolers, eat hot dogs, and moo while things explode over our heads. And as we sit there every Fourth of July, chewing and mooing, the local school band honks out Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture. When I was little I liked this, especially the cannons going off at the end. But it's been twenty-some years. By now I've had it with that 1812 scene. I'm ready for music which can convey the spirit of America and New England without requiring heavy explosives. It's ironic that, all through the Cold War, we traditionally celebrated our independence with a rousing piece of music by a Russian. Now that we enjoy an era of cultural interchange, more and more is being made of our own national music. Over the past two years, there has been a spate of recordings of three pieces in particular which celebrate New England and its curious blend of Puritan austerity and Revolutionary fervor – pieces by American composers William Schuman, Walter Piston, and Charles Ives. If your beer goes sour at the thought of more Tchiakovskian pyrotechnics, you might look into these July Fourth alternatives for your Classical CD collection.

William Schuman's New England Triptych is the most popular of the three. Schuman based the piece on melodies by 18th century composer William Billings, who wrote, among other austere choral works, several Revolutionary War hymns. Billings was a Bostonian, and in fact is buried on Boston Common, his headstone right across from the Marais on Boylston Street. Imagine the man who advocated "teaching and admonishing one another in Psalms and Hymns and Spir'tual Songs" rotting within jay-walking distance of all that thirtysomething singles action.

William Schuman's orchestral transformation of this early American music is extremely rugged and powerful, full of brash, patriotic energy, yet not without its introspective side. Particularly moving is the haunting central section, based on Billings' "When Joseph Wept" – a kind of American version of the famous Vaughan Williams Tallis Fantasia. There have been at least five recordings of this piece released within the past year and a half. I'd recommend either the old Hanson/Eastman-Rochester Orchestra recording (paired with the Ives Three Places in New England, Mercury 432 755-2), the Sedares/Phoenix Symphony recording (paired with a surprisingly handsome symphony by Bernard Hermann, who wrote the music for the film Psycho – Koch 3-7135-2), or the Slatkin/St. Louis performance released last year, shortly after the composer's death (featuring Schuman's ambitious final symphony, "The American Muse" – RCA 61282-2).

Harvardian composer Walter Piston wrote his Three New England Sketches for the 100th Worcester Music Festival. Although the piece was written for Worcester, it is still very beautiful. Each movement depicts a quintessential New England scene. The first, "Seaside", evokes a gray, bitter day at Scituate or Newburyport, waves monotonously battering the rocks on the shore. The second movement, "Summer Evening", is a kind of scherzo, alive with muted excitement – you can almost see kids scampering under streetlights, and fat insects bumping off screen windows at the local ice cream stand. In the final movement, "Mountains", the canvas spreads, and we're treated to a vast orchestral portrait of Mt. Monadnock or the White Mountains – looming, rugged, and loud.

Once again, there has been a spate of recordings of this work in the last year or so. I'd recommend the Schwarz/Seattle Symphony recording on Delos (paired with the 4th Symphony and a sparkling harp capriccio, DE 3106), or, as Delos is often out of business, the Slatkin/St. Louis Symphony version (paired with "The Incredible Flutist" and the 6th Symphony, RCA 60798-2).

The Three Places in New England by eccentric Connecticut composer and insurance salesman Charles Ives is the earliest of these three works, but also the most difficult to come to grips with. Ives begins with a portrait of a St. Gaudens statue in Boston Common depicting "Colonel Shaw and his Colored Regiment", a Civil War memorial. A depleted military marchbeat drags beneath fragments of a more suave, sophisticated tune, suggesting grisly sacrifices underlying the stable, charming world of Beacon Hill. In the second movement, "Putnam's Camp, Redding, Connecticut", two festival marching bands collide uproariously. Each plays at a different tempo, in a different key – this is a typical Ives shtick, which one can also hear in his wonderful Holidays Symphony. By playing several popular songs, marches and hymns simultaneously, Ives creates a brand of highly condensed, post-modern Americana – sort of like eating apple pie and Mom at the same time. Not to everyone's taste, but amusing to some. Finally, in the third movement, "The Housatonic at Stockbridge", Ives paints a picture of a languid river, and a river-side dreamer who longs ineffectualy to travel to the sea. It's complicated listening, but it's very rewarding. I'd suggest either the Hanson/Eastman-Rochester Orchestra recording mentioned above, or Michael Tilson Thomas conducting our very own Boston Symphony - both of these recordings available at mid-price.

Three works, each offering three views of New England. With all that variety, why cloud your Fourth of July with the same old noise and gunsmoke? Branch out, wake up, smell the coffee. 1812 is over in a big way. ❑

PUTTIN' ON THE RITZ

The Ritz Roof Restaurant Opening

FLYING FISH: Ice sculptures at the Ritz Roof's Raw Bar

It was an oasis in the shimmering summer heat. The guests were well-dressed and well-behaved. Gentility was the rule of the day. Aftah all, this is the Ritz dahlings, and the last time someone made a scene here was when deah old aunt Muffy pulled her skirts up and did the can-can on the buffet table back in 1939. Well, I can tell you, the maitre d' had a seizure, one of the other dining guests fainted dead away, and they marched old Muff off in a strappy white number and we haven't seen her since. So, in comparison, the Ritz's press party to celebrate the grand re-opening of their roof deck restaurant was pretty damn tame.

IF YOU GO

THE RITZ CARLTON ROOF RESTAURANT

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY NIGHTS
6PM - 1AM
15 ARLINGTON ST
BOSTON
536-5700

The Ritz hasn't had their roof restaurant open since 1946, when a nasty hurricane (no, it wasn't Aunt Muffy) blew through town and destroyed the original. From 1933 (coincidentally – ha ha – when Prohibition was repealed) until 1946, the Ritz was "the" place to be of a swell summer evening, and it was viciously exclusive. You had to be one of the "best" members of Boston society to get close enough to the roof to even breath the same air as the Ritz regulars.

The times they have a-changed, however, and even the Ritz has had to admit the existence of the lower classes; starting Friday, June 18, the Ritz will admit the general public into the no-longer-rarefied inner sanctum. However, they will make you pay extra ($10 admission charge) for the pleasure of mingling with the nobs.

This is definitely not to say that you won't get your money's worth. The Ritz has fabulous views of the city in all directions, a customary dress code, so you won't have to look at any noxious touristy tee-shirts, a seven-piece swing band pumps out the jams (if you think "That Old Black Magic" is a jam), and the Ritz serves up its delovely and delicious menu, including lobstah, oysters on the half shell, Boston creme pie, and of course, much, much champagne.

It was the much, much champagne part that really did me in for the opening on June 14. This little soirée was actually a press junket, the really wing-ding black tie affair happening on the following Thursday. The members of the press, being notoriously under-paid and under-fed, swooped down upon the mile-long buffet table like sharks on bait, while the intrepid waiters whizzed through the crowd, carefully side-stepping the media-mangers, and miraculously supplying me with a fresh glass of bubbly at an average rate of one every five minutes. The band played on bravely, even though while I was there, I didn't see a single couple take to the parquet dance floor.

Since this was a media event, and I was among my alleged peers, I strangely felt the need to behave rather respectably. This need was what precipitated my early egress, however, because I started to get the uneasy suspicion that if one more waiter passed me one more glass of champagne I would leave the Ritz in rather the same fashion as Aunt Muff, and we all know how gauche that would be. ❑

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

General

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Bull & Finch Pub (Cheers)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

Frogg Lane Bar & Grill
720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos, B-7. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

The Littlest Bar
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

Market Place Cafe
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m.. "Street Magic" A cappella every Wednesday at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

Province Street Pub
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

Warren Tavern
241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, B-5. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals & athletes. Also claims to attract Boston's most beautiful women (?!) Local celebs don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

Pop/Jazz/ Blues/Reggae

Cantab Lounge
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

Nightstage
497-8200, 823 Main St., Camb, A-3. An intimate, well laid-out club with a seating capacity of just 250. National and well known local acts. Blues, Rock, Zydeco, Jazz, Folk and Country are propelled by a sound system that will blast you comfortably to the outer limits of space and back. One of Boston's best up-close-and-personal clubs. Casual dress. Call Ticketron 931-2000 for ticket info.

Paradise Rock Club
254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos, C-3. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

Rathskeller
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos, C-5. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

Ryle's Jazz Club
876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb, B-5. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryle's. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

Western Front
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

Dancing

Avalon
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, D-5. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

Avenue C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, C-6. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

Piano Rooms

Monday's Piano Bar
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline, D-3. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

Breweries

Commonwealth Brewing Company
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

Irish

Black Rose
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

O'Leary's
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

What's New?
The savvy shoppers who have discovered this tiny treasure trove of accessories, art, antiques, and furniture return every few weeks to see "what's new" at What's Next. Selections, chosen for individuality and quality, are priced to sell quickly.

Folk art from the Ivory Coast, from $45 to $300, is marvelous and makes great collector's items. The "White House" for political birds is great fun, as are an antique painted screen, birdcages from the Adirondacks, and handmade tapestry pillows in great colors for $50 to $150. Most intriguing are ceramic garden stools by artist Eric O'Leary, whose work is displayed in the Tokyo Museum. These are perfect for indoors or out, and, at $300, are half of their usual price. For the accessories junkie, this shop is a must. Personal checks, MC/VISA accepted..

What's Next, 335 Boylston Street, Newton, MA. just past Chestnut Hill Mall and before turnaround for the Atrium Mall. Parking on John Street immediately after Sunoco Station (965-0793, 964-8688); Mon. – Sat. 10:30 a.m. – 5 p.m. or by app't. Closed Saturdays July and August.

From the Sole
Here's the best tip for saving the "soul" of your shoes....run, don't walk, to your nearest Instant Shoe Repair (at four locations). Cobbler Mac Shlayen will cover the bottom of your shoes with a tissue paper-thin layer of rubber. When the rubber wears out, it gets replaced, always leaving the original leather sole intact.

Rubber heels are $9, cowboy heels $12, rubber half soles and heels $28, weatherproofing $6, and shoe dyeing (fabric) $15. Many other shoe repairs are available, including retail products such as shoe trees, silicone sprays, inner soles, and polishes. In June and July all work is 10% off and all retail supplies are 20% off. Personal checks, cash, no charges.

Instant Shoe Repair, Cambridgeside Galleria, (Map 6-B, 252-0810); 113 High Street, Boston, (Map 7-B); 51 Mt. Auburn Street, Watertown (Map 1-B); 11 Elm Street Danvers. 10 a.m. – 9 p.m. most locations.

Hairy Sunday
Bon Visage, a full-service Newbury Street salon, is now open on Sunday, which, according to owner Maureen Burke, "is a great day to spend at the salon. The atmosphere is relaxed, pleasant, unhurried and even children can get a cut." Walk-ins are O.K., although the salon is being "discovered" quickly as a Sunday place to go so appointments are advisable.

Cut and style runs $30 to $40, manicures are $13 with tips, wraps and sculptures available. Pedicures are $30. A one hour glycolic acid facial is $42.50. Products carried by the salon are Goldwell, Paul Mitchell, Taite, and Braccato. Personal checks (in state, please!) MC/Visa accepted.

Bon Visage, (Map 6-C) 69 Newbury Street, Boston, second floor (536-0800); Sunday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Door is locked, so ring buzzer.

Sweet Repose
Also available now on Sunday, next to Bon Visage, is Repose, a massage therapy center. Available types of massage are Shiatsu, Sports, Swedish and pain relief. According to owner Evelyn Clark, these skills are used to individualize each treatment by choosing the correct balance of techniques.

Traditional massage therapy (Swedish) is the systematic manipulation of the soft tissues of the body. Pain relief therapy relieves trauma due to injury, illness, or overuse of the body. Sports massage is further defined to maximize athletic performance. This type of massage can prevent injuries and speed recovery from strenuous work-outs.

Shiatsu is "finger pressure" and is meant to balance the vital energy which flows in connected channels throughout the body. Loose fitting clothes are worn for Shiatsu and no oils or lotions are used. A discount is being offered to clients who purchase a series of three massages for $150 (to be used by one person only). Rates: one hour $55, half hour $35. Personal checks, MC/Visa accepted.

Repose Massage Therapy Center, 75 Newbury Street, Boston (Map 6-C 267-9115); Sunday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Jack of All Trades
Need a quick coat of paint in your office or home? Windows need cleaning, carpet need steaming? Tom Purtell is the one person who can do all that and more. At $35 an hour, he will dry-clean or steam extract your carpets or area rugs (no Orientals). Windows will. be cleaned inside and out for residential and commercial buildings (no second floors on commercial work).

Janitorial service is a specialty for commercial offices. Light painting touch-ups or just a coat or two to "freshen up" a room or office is also available. Light furniture-moving for residences or offices is also offered. Take advantage of this very specialized service. Discount with mention of this column at $25 per hour.

Beacon Cleaning, Brookline (734-8509).

Doyle and Decain Inducted Into Hall of Fame

Silk Panties, the Mongoose, and Sex-on-the-Beach are just some of the odd requests Eddie Doyle and Billy Decain have had to pour, mix and shake as bartenders at the Bull & Finch Pub on Beacon Street for 18 and five years respectively. In a ceremony Friday night June 11, both Doyle and DeCain were honored by Bartender Magazine and inducted into the Bartender's Hall of Fame. Each received commemorative rings and engraved silver beer mugs at the lively festivities, proving that even though "Cheers" has ended the partying has not. -Nicole Lamy

Improper Impersonals

Feel the urge to unleash your frustrations or vent your hostilities on an unsuspecting friend or enemy? Look no further than the Improper Impersonals, a forum designed for pranksters, irate neighbors, relatives, maniacs or any would-be target of your acid tongue. Best of all they're FREE! Send your Impersonals to us at Improper Impersonals, The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146. Or fax it to us at 232-4305.

Dear Mulligan,
You are such an idiot. You think you know what the hell you're doing, but you don't. Way to run everything down the drain. Contrary to popular belief, there are opinions other than yours, and, guess what! Most of them are light years ahead. Fascinating, isn't it? I wish I had the nerve to smack the shit out of you the way you deserve it. Might actually knock some sense into your infantile little cranium. Although I doubt it. There's quite obviously no hope for someone as dense as you. Pleasant dreams after the trust fund runs dry.
Someone Infinitely Smarter Than You

Val,
Start at the gleaming dome and finish at the weary howling fields. Beware of those bearing chocolate-covered artichoke hearts.
The 23 have spoken

Hey Pam!
Just shut up and keep your legs spread!
The King of the Ass-Bangers
Luke C.,

Baby Doll,
Why isn't your arm around me! Mmmmmm. Barney is a cross-dresser. Don't forget your pill, and while you're at it, better double up on the Prozac. This means turtle, to those of you scoring at home. Never, ever stop Baby, maybe we should pull over, we are in CT you know. All my love always,
Peachy

Everyone in Brookline knows you'll sleep with anyone and that you satisfy no one. There are three reasons for this:1. You just lie there all tensed up; 2. You don't lubricate, so it's hard to get in you; 3. You have a ridiculously low pain threshold. You need professional help, Pam!
One of Many

Pam,I will not compliment you by telling you just how spiteful, malignant and arrogant you are. I am going to express how much I pity you, as much as my pity bores you. You must have spent a long time lying to yourself. You seem to believe the lies which you spew. I don't weep in self pity, or in pain for my "poor, mangled heart". The tear that fell represented all my rage, fury, and hatred, for every girl you've mentally RAPED! The tear is for all who had seen "goodness" in your degenerate soul. Believe me, I know who I am. I'm not the "little girl" you once knew. I've grown up. I've hardened. I don't put up with the bullshit this time. I don't need you. I don't need to be told I'm loved. I don't need to wake up with you on top of me. When you were horny and I wouldn't give in, I was "cold". When the table turned, when you were tired, I was a whore. I couldn't think a clear thought, that's how badly you screwed with my mind. I am no longer ready to jump on the T and succumb to your fantasy Now teacher, teach your fine pupil that you can have a healthy relationship with someone over the age of sixteen, without sex! You can't do it, can you?!! You'll never change! You can't love with your penis. You haven't the slightest notion of love.
Once Succubus,
SEV X

Norman,
I hope that you are really happy now! I wasted 2.5 years of my life with someone who has no conception of the word love...you made a fool of me
- use Pamela,

Jacob,
Words cannot describe the foulness of your base acts. Very soon you will have to answer for the crimes you have commited against Kindred and Kine. -Esau

We are shocked by your recent attack in this paper on Randy. Considering what a crummy screw you are (and we all agree on that) you should be grateful he found something to praise you. Frankly, if you weren't so willing to take it up the Hershey Highway, no one would want to have sex with you.
Ron K., Steve M., Harry C, Bryan W.

Ann Margret,
Hey you fat cow pattie from hell. One more word about Jamie and I'll beat the stuffing out of you. Nice try last summer, you boyfriend stealing wench. Get a grip girl! Why would he take chopped liver when he has prime rib at home? Quit gossiping, Vinnie doesn't want to hear it. Feel like you were used? Well girl, you were! He treated you just like the tramp that you are. Beat it wench. Get your own man. Although what man would want you? Nobody, but nobody likes a fat chick. Do me a favor. Stay out of the North End, because if I see you, you'd better run back to Quincy where you belong. "Used and abused". See ya, wouldn't want to be ya.
Rosemarie

Little One:
Hey, too bad it's not YOUR birthday this month – I'd pay for you to have that chinchilla removed from your ass! Never mind – he probably likes it, since there's a bunny in there too. I do have a surprise for you, though. It's hot, sticky, and wet, and I found it in the gutter. That's right – Marlboro miles! See you soon. PS. When I was in your conference room the other day, Bill Clinton called and asked for your theories on the new reductionist economic policy debate. He left a number to call him back – 1-800-GET-ME-SOME.
Love, Precious

Dear Eddie:
OK, you weasel, here's where I finally get even for all the crap you've pulled on me! When I get through with you, scum-butt, you're going to be sorrier than a mouse smothering in a snake's belly. Remember 1989, puke-pail? That's the year you met HER. Who the hell do you think you are, treating me like garbage? By the time I'm through with you, you'll be more miserable than a diabetic in a bakery. Before you met HER you thought I was wonderful, you filthy little ball of used toilet paper. It's not my fault you're both blind and stupid, horse-butt. And don't think you can ditch me just because you met HER. You can't edge me out of your heart, Eddie – it's my own personal playground, and I'm SWINGIN', not SLIDIN'. I'll teach you to undersell my personal value, diaper-pail.
Always your favorite,
Elizabeth

Dear Amy, Jay, Rob, Kai, Chris, and Mike:
Thanks for taking me out on my BIRTHDAY last week! Nothing like stumbling into traffic and crawling up the stairs to make you appreciate such good friends. That poor cab driver will probably never pick up a drunk again! Hey, anybody wanna go to Grendel's this weekend. . . .? YO, THE GRIND!
Love, Ya Housemate
er - so just continue to sit at the pinball machine at Kelly's and waste your life away. You're the loser in the game you played with me - what goes around, comes around, so I hope you suffer half as much as I did...make it double. Die, you loser.
P.S. Yeah, that was a vindictive screw that night, so remember it well, cuz "ya never gonna get it."
Guess who - EEEEEEEEK!

©1993

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — JUNE 9- JUNE 22, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

The last of the nasty aspects, a Mars Saturn opposition pitting reformers against reactionaries, young Turks vs. old farts, is hitting us right now. However, by the weekend, life should be "loverly," as peaceful, artful Venus dodges stray shots to bring back romance and harmony (of sorts). An expensive, optimistic sun Jupiter square on Sunday promises more than it'll actually deliver, but still good news is good news anyway you look at it. Take advantage; before you turn around, Mercury will be turning retrograde (exact 7/1 at 5:29 a.m.) for its three-week retrospective. Get the machines repaired, merchandise delivered, letters written, agreements signed, crucial calls made ASAP because Mercury's change of motion affects us all before the scheduled due date. Increased sensitivity to parentage and patriotism, appropriately enough, during the Mommy Daddy, Cancer Capricorn full moon (exact 7/3 at 1:45 p.m.). Festivities for the Independence Day weekend may be dampened by a chilly Venus Saturn square. Pay homage to the folks and society's norms, but don't feel too bad if your new romance can't weather its first big test. On Monday Venus flips into double edged Gemini, the sign that knows two loves are better than one.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Venus in your money house rewards your talent and tenacity, your ability to stay the course, at least until the July 4th weekend, when friends may disrupt the easy flow of goodies. Can't live with 'em, can't do 'em in. During the full moon, family matters loom larger than they really are; blame the lighting and theatricality of the leading characters in your historical drama. Mercury's backpedalling through your house of domestic bliss is great for writing, but not for rewiring electrical appliances. Be careful in the kitchen.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Voluptuous Venus in Taurus makes you the tastiest treat in the zodiac this weekend, beloved by Aquarius and Pisces. Your artwork is appreciated, too. But after the passion subsides, after Scorpio presses your buttons, your Venus ruler can leave you feeling high and dry when she splits for Gemini on the 5th. Nevertheless, you shouldn't be any poorer for the experience. Lucky, but risky aspects this week, so if you feel your numbers are coming up, place that wager. Just don't spend the jackpot before you've collected.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Since your Mercury ruler is turning retrograde on July 1, buy what you must, schedule repairs, demand answers before this cosmic due date arrives. Since Mercury rules your sign, you're apt to have problems with communication devices (except body language,) before the rest of us do. After Mercury turns around, money matters sit on the back burner for the next three weeks. Pay attention to what happens during the full moon July 4th weekend so that you can adjust your plans for the rest of the summer.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

A particularly expensive weekend ahead if you aren't careful, if you can't curb birthday hysteria and your friends' best intentions. Mercury turns around in your sign on the 1st, so a decision recently arrived at might have to be thought through again, particularly travel plans. The Cancer Cap full moon illuminates the closest relationships, i.e., your life and/or business partner. Pay attention to their messages, and if you're not sure, ask. They're probably as confused, as uncertain as you.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

A woman prominent in your profession or community sees that your best work is properly appreciated, then she messes with your household before trying to attach herself to your social scene for the 4th. Could she be Mom in all her earthly glory? Friends provide a chance to add to your finances on the 27th, but the operative word here is, "chance." Of course you know deep down you can't lose; when your sun ruler plays fast and loose with lucky Jupiter your confidence is unshakable.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Substance and quality, earthly rewards for ethereal beauty, good taste and the good sense to be born an earth sign. Goodies flow between you and your Taurus and Capricorn brethren this week, but it's the Virgo reputation that's spreading, your career that's expanding. Enjoy. Your Mercury ruler turns around so fast on the 1st that it could dull the edge you've just been given. Patience is the virtue that gets you through the summer doldrums, revising your relationship with professional peers and casual friends alike.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)

Oh happy day! You'll feel twice-blessed as your Venus ruler beautifies the house and the people in it. Artistic and technological marvels appear with little effort, joint purchases are made without a fight. Peace reigns over the weekend, passion during the week. Get what you can while you can, because Mercury's retrogression can affect your work situation, and by implication, your home life. An offer from abroad, a writing or travel assignment may appear when the sun squares expansive Jupiter in your sign.'

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Venus in your partnership house arranges for an array of happy couplings this weekend, although if you're struggling for the upper hand, you might lose your grip by the middle of the week, out-waited, not outwitted, by bulldogged Taurean determination. Plus, a promise of money for a venture with enthusiastic friends, a stock tip from one of them, or just an excuse to party like there's no tomorrow. Mercury turning around in your house of international travel and scholarship can postpone trips, communications and conferences.

SAGITARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-, DECEMBER 21)

An erratic financial matter may be stabilized by a co-worker's idea and your steady hands on approach. Perhaps you'll pay off a debt by providing a service, but the big career coup comes through a partnership deal that could bring the kind of success you've envisioned ever since the sun last joined forces with your Jupiter ruler back in September. (Remember?) After too many delays, the final piece of the puzzle appears. Mercury's retrogression can be a plus, giving you time to carefully check out their resources.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

Peace and plenty as beneficent Venus rewards the planets in your sign. Artists do especially well, praise and profits flow with ease. A true life romance can be just as satisfying as the fantasy, so enjoy every minute of this sweet confection of a weekend because it won't come again soon. As Mercury gets ready to turn around, a deal you thought was progressing, the rapport you had with a partner had can stop dead in its tracks. Don't sign anything after Wednesday. Be patient with the flakes and, above all, kind.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

A hot and, we hope, cheap romantic thrill when Venus trines your Uranus ruler this weekend. But if you're determined to spend money, look for an investment in entertainment that can eventually (autumn) reap a big return. Otherwise simply have fun at home, expanding your bag of tricks or plans for a July 4th bash. Retrograde Saturn comes back to Aquarius on Wednesday, so you may feel inexplicably sad, a touch more anxious for no apparent reason. That's the reason.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Another chance at the great romance, only this time it'll involve casual friends and neighbors. Just who have you been hanging out with and what sort of invitations to what sort of parties have been extended? Your urge to sacrifice something special meets with general approval this weekend, people think of you as an angel, an artist of the spirit. They, in turn, are offered the run of your house and everything in the cupboard. Are you testing your mate's or roommate's patience and generosity or what?

SUMMER IN MYSTIC

Cool sea breezes and a harbor full of sails welcome visitors to Mystic, Connecticut, one of New England's hottest vacation spots. This historic coastal community in Southeastern Connecticut combines modern-day attractions with antique charm, having recently added nautical museums, art galleries, a quaint shopping district and over forty restaurants to its landscape while managing to maintain its weather-beaten, seafaring charm. This summer, visitors are in for a special treat as the residents of Mystic celebrate the 70th anniversary of its bascule bridge, the first of its kind built in the United States. Drawing a crowd of 2,000 its founding day in 1918, the bascule or "see-saw" bridge will be viewed by thousands more tourists this season. But don't linger for too long atop the bascule—the original builders put enough power into the drawing mechanism that the bridge will open in a matter of seconds. ❑

Foaming Your Own

This is the kind of friendly store that people wander into as if it were their own home, and that's because the relaxed, friendly brewers who come here are members of the fermentational community. At The Modern Brewer, everything is available for you to make your own beer or ale, and that includes the advice of the employees, who are themselves brewers. Like the pleasures of knitting or bread-baking, the time spent is part of the fun; it takes a few weeks from start to quaffing, though much of that is spent simply waiting. Malt extract – sold in horizontal containers exuding caramelized drips – is one way to begin, or you can choose some of the dried malts in burlap-lined barrels that fill the shop, which bear appetizing names like "Scottish peat-smoked malt." Hops, crunchy and flower-like, are added and boiled together and then put into the large glass "carboy" jug with its mad-scientist-like twisted glass airlock. Yeast is then added, and the primary fermentation is underway, lasting days. A thorough sanitizing of the equipment adds to the laboratory feeling of the endeavor. More sugar is added, and the product is bottled, and again it sits till it comes to the point of perfect freshness. This on-tap quality of the resulting beer is one reason brewers like to brew. And, like all good hobbies, numerous refinements and variations are available, such as going the "mash" route of boiling those sexy, aromatic grains yourself. Some like to brew with buddies. The means of production of rootbeer and cola, involving similar steps, are also for sale here.

"Hel" of A Good View

As the helicopter banks, it appears to peel the city like a giant orange, offering otherwise unknown vistas out of its 360 degree windows. From 1,000 feet up, the effortless glide down Route 2, looking down at all those suckers trapped in their cars, is a bliss greater and far more intimate than what you get in a plane. It's all fluffy green treetops and, as it turns out, a veritable Hollywood of swimming pools. The closely-viewed houses and pie-piece streets of Cambridge are followed over the Longfellow Bridge, hovering over the breathtaking Charles River, and into the city itself. In the Public Garden, the Swanboats seem even more toy-like when seen from above, and the townhouses of the Back Bay look elegantly urban. As you scrape the skyscrapers of downtown Boston, mosquito-ing around them excitingly closely, there comes a certain sense of freedom (after all, you don't have to park or stop for lights!) that is nothing less than thrilling. Distances and proximities drunkenly rearrange themselves. This sightseeing adventure, in a Robinson R22 helicopter can be had for $250 for four people ($62.50 apiece). Another beautiful and yet also pragmatic use of the helicopter is for transport, say, to the Cape or the Vineyard (landing can occur in a big-enough backyard). After their initial helicopter experience, some sightseers (and increasingly more women) are getting "swept up" in flying and decide to take flying lessons and move towards getting a pilot's license. This involves 45 hours of flight training and 35 hours of ground school work for around $7,000.

You've Earned It, (Or Maybe You Inherited It) Now Spend It!

With so much effort and attention focused on the saving of money, there's a whoosh! effect of perhaps only slightly guilty relief in seeing that there's a whole magazine devoted to unabashed pricey-issimo acquisition. In the Robb Report, pesky words like "affordable" will never be heard; the more expensive the better. The very highest end in cars, yachts, art, stereos, watches, super-premium whiskies, motorcycles, and even "status pets of the 90's" are shown in high glitter and gloss. And the ads, flowing seamlessly from the editorial content, are ones you really read, featuring one-of-a-kind things. They offer leisure toys for the rich and famous, like jukeboxes, fancy guitars, wall-sized video games, with virtual reality and 3-D graphics, investment-protectors (Doberman guard dogs standing taller than the Porsche behind them, fortressing well-dressed blonde children) and gorgeous real estate all over the world, in high-color photo ads that don't flinch at beginning the price with "$1 million." In the July issue, three one-percent limited partnership shares in the New York Yankees are offered ("Sit in the Owner's Box at Yankee Stadium. Entertain your clients in a grand style."). Amazingly, you can buy and fly a newly-produced Messerschmitt jet fighter. The Robb Report's Christmas gift extravaganza issue, for the person who has everything and needs even more of it, makes wonderful brocaded-armchair reading for the rest of us, and the editor Rob R. Feeman (a man whose name has two financial puns in it) is soliciting ideas for next December. Even if you aren't Cher/Ross/Michael/Donald, it's fun to imagine this much liquid gold slithering through your life. Given the pricey contents, the subscription price of $65 isn't too high.

When Mellea Vineyards Needed to Squeeze More Juice out of Their Ad Dollars, They Turned to the Improper Bostonian.

"At Mellea Vineyards, we track where every single customer heard about us . . . We've been advertising for three issues so far this season and the ad is definitely paying itself off . . .We've received tons of customers from the Improper Bostonian . . . Just this past weekend (Memorial Day Weekend), 30-40% of our business came directly from your newspaper . . . I would definitely recommend the Improper Bostonian as a great source for reaching the Boston Market."

SUZY BECKER

She Learned It From Her Cat

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

Suzy Becker's voice, tentative and soft as the blurry watercolors in her book All I Need To Know I Learned From My Cat (1.4 million copies have been published in 16 languages), comes at you with surprising speed, as if she were wheeling in her thoughts on some sort of pushcart of urgency. Yet this is somehow appropriate, because her whimsical style coexists with a drivenness and social vision. Look again at those cats intruding in paper bags and toilets and you will also see that the book is, in fact, a moral one, made up of what she calls "little life lessons" writ feline. Even as a child, Becker had the desire to "make the world a better place," which may explain why she fled early from her job as a copywriter on the grounds that it felt like a sellout. The greeting card business she founded in 1987, the Widget Factory, was a better vehicle for what she acknowledges as her idealism, and led Workman Publishing to discover her. Together they came up with her spoof of Robert Fulgham's tales of kindergarten wisdom. With its carbonated, slightly lopsided, handwritten words, her messages and drawings are uncynical, and yet gently ironic. A picture of a cat getting a stomach pat says "Make yourself vulnerable," while the next page has the cat grabbing the patting arm: "But don't be afraid to bite the hand that feeds you." Elsewhere, she promotes both appropriate outrage: "Get mad when you are stepped on," but also forgiveness: "Forget that you were stepped on." On the heels (or paws) of her success, Becker quickly moved on to writing a second book with the help of school children she'd both taught and interviewed. This one's called The All-Better Book, full of solutions to world problems. "Can you think of a cure for prejudice?" she asks. "Invent a microscopic dot you stick to your clothes that makes you be nice," responds Jake, age 9. Becker, who bicycled all across the country after college, is organizing a September bike-a-thon called "Ride Far" that has already raised $77,000 for children with AIDS. She has also been chosen as a White House Fellow, a job that will help her explain the "whole unwieldy process of the government so we can come back and interpret it to our communities." Not bad for someone who had to learn everything from a cat. ❑

ROGER BERKOWITZ

The Incredible Mr. Legal

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

The first thing you notice about the office of Roger Berkowitz, CEO of Legal Sea Foods, is its simple and charming clutter. There are no faux putting greens or impressive scenic views. Only a modest desk and sitting area that are littered with fish trinkets and seafood regalia. The walls are not covered with rare or exotic works of art; rather, they are covered with photos of family or celebrities that have sampled the cuisine at one of his many restaurants. There is even a Jethro Tull boxed-set on the floor in the corner of the room. The only object in the room that has the slightest smell of power and authority is a Japanese Sushi Chef's coat that is tightly bound over the back of Roger's chair.

"In the beginning," Roger says in a soft spoken manner that lacks the bravado of the stereotypical CEO, "We were a struggling family business. We were just trying to earn a living with the product that we knew best." Roger reflects back to the time when Legal Sea Foods was just a small fish market that his father had started in the 1950's. Back to the times when people were forced to eat fish for economic or religious reasons. When people weren't exactly craving fish for its culinary pleasures. "I grew up hating fish," Roger laughs, as he recalls memories of his mother's disastrous attempts at fish dinners, "She would take a wonderful piece of Haddock... pour milk over the top, place it in the broiler and burn it." He thinks that this was a regular occurrence in many households at that time. "No one really knew how to cook fish," he adds, "But I think as times have changed, people's perceptions toward fish have changed."

Roger credits the success of Legal Sea Foods to the freshness of his products and the sophisticated manner in which they are handled. "We're all about consistency and quality," he says earnestly, "It's sort of a religion around here." And it is from that religion that the mantra "If it ain't fresh, it ain't legal" comes.While Roger is at the helm, Legal Sea Foods will keep expanding and evolving. As far as the future of the company is concerned, Roger is very excited and optimistic about his plans. "We're always tweaking the menu," he says, and then adds with a mischievous grin, "You're going to be seeing some interesting things." ❑

SEX in Boston?

by Nicole Mills

It's late on a Saturday night and Newbury Street bars are warm masses of twenty to thirty-somethings. The athletic and tanned patrons, posing, drinking, mingling, spying for Mr. or Ms. Right Now. The night is in full swing at the notorious last stops for those who don't intend to spend the wee hours of the morning watching American Gladiator reruns.

Despite AIDS and a renewed nation-wide campaign for "family values" (espousing monogamy and an almost sweetly naive sexual innocence as an ideal), sexual activity amongst unattached people is at a high. Newbury Street is just one solar system in the universe of Boston bars where young singles go to meet someone for a short-term, "no money down" relationship. Even though the image of the swinging single died out with disco balls and Studio 54, unattached people are still having sex, even in Boston. A bastion of hedonism the Hub is not, especially when compared to sin cities like New York or Bangkok, but Boston does have its fair share of pick-up joints, one-night stands, and sexual acrobats.

Michael, a waiter who works in the Back Bay, is loitering outside of Lansdowne Street's Venus de Milo late on a Saturday night. The skin-clad go-go dancers in their cages have long since stopped gyrating, but the music still pumps. On the street, couples make last-minute arrangements: Your place or mine? Michael, wryly observing the scene says "There are nights when I go out, I just want to hang out, have a good time. Then there are other nights when I go out to meet someone. The night doesn't end until I've connected." Five minutes later he saunters off to kiss a blonde woman with tight cut-off shorts, who he says he met earlier in the club. After a brief discussion, they leave together. Michael definitely "connected" tonight.

The Sex equals Death message of the late 80s has given way to a counterrevolution in urban sexual patterns. The holding tanks of AIDS–inspired monogamy and abstinence have burst into a frenzy of sexual backlash, countering all the warnings and admonishments and "new morality?" How are people reacting to the frightening sexual climate that we're living in? Judy Steinberg, medical co-director of the Sexually Transmitted Diseases clinic at Boston City Hospital, says that the rates of sexually-transmitted diseases have gone down since 1990, both in Massachusetts and nationwide. "If the numbers for STD's are any indication," she says, "then promiscuity is down." It could also be, however, that the sexually active have modified their behavior to make it safer, as a result of increased educational efforts on behalf of groups like the AIDS Action Committee.

While it may no longer be politically correct to rack up notches on a bedpost – and with the HIV grim reaper glaring down upon us – Bostonians are hardly restricting their sexual activities to just one partner. "Just because someone has sex often, or is seeing more than one person doesn't mean that they're promiscuous anymore," says Christine, 25, an accountant from Brookline. "As long as they're careful, and they're not hurting anyone, it shouldn't matter."

At Gen X, a new club in the Fenway area catering to the twenty-something generation, there are cupfuls of Lifestyles condoms on the bars, which the bartenders frequently toss at customers who are getting physical. "Get a room!" somebody yells to one couple locked in a tight embrace. The man's hands are planted firmly on the woman's backside, and the her left leg is wrapped around his body while she balances precariously on her right. When they finally break apart, she heads into the bathroom. Her girlfriend, primping inside, asks if she'll sleep with him. She shrugs, replying "Maybe. My ex-boyfriend might show up, and I might go home with him. But if he doesn't..." Is she looking for a relationship, or any kind of commitment? She shrugs. "No, I've had it with relationships for awhile," she grumbles. "I just want to have fun being single." Which means, to some extent, being able to have sex with whomever she chooses.

On a Friday night at Zanzibar, a popular downtown nightclub inhabited by men in suits and women in cocktail dresses, the capacity crowd is mingling and dancing in the faux tropical setting. Bill, a Stockbroker, is working the crowd like a politician. Twenty-eight years old, his well crafted preppy-boy-next-door look positions him as a worthwhile catch. He claims to have slept with over four hundred women, a good percentage of whom he met in this very club, or elsewhere in "the Alley." (Boylston Place) "For the most part, it's easy," he says. "You can go home with a woman, and most of them you don't have to worry that she wants a S.O. (significant other) or anything. They know how the game goes."

In the balconies on the second floor of Zanzibar, couples cozy up inside the booths carved in the wall, getting as intimate as possible without actually engaging in sex. Bill says, "I'd bet most of those people just hooked up tonight, and I bet most of them go home together. If they're already that far along, they're definitely going all the way. And you know you don't act that excited with someone you've been dating for awhile."

The thrill of a new encounter and a potentially great sexual experience is what motivates Bill, and many other singles in the bar scene, to seek out a one-night stand. The hormones start pumping and the attraction gets so overwhelming, they just can't wait to get home. And sometimes, they don't wait to go home. Bouncers at almost every club in the city have stories about the lustful couples they've surprised in bathrooms, balconies and back alleys. A Zanzibar employee claims to have surprised more than a few couples en flagrant delicto up in the dark and seemingly secluded balconies and an ex-doorman at Joe's American Bar & Grill recalls the night they had to kick a couple out of the ladies room because they were in one of the stalls after last call. "They came out buttoning up their clothes, they didn't even seem to care that everybody knew what they were doing."

Surprised? Don't be. One minute romances are more prevalent than you might think. Even in the era of the modern-day plague, social mores and good behavior seem to fly out the window in the face of the combined lust-and-alcohol-induced tidal wave.

Gazing from a vantage point above the foray, Bill is prowling the depths of Zanzibar like a shark, he spots some likely prey, she responds with fleeting eye contact and a toss of the hair, he moves in for the kill. It is quite evident that it's not just men who are out looking for a one-night fling. Women are starting to go out more aggressively, and they're not necessarily looking for a long-term relationship. What has happened to commitment? Women traditionally were the ones who wanted commitment and marriage, and they used sex as the bargaining chip for securing the ring around their finger. After all, mother put it so subtly: "He won't buy the cow if he can get the milk for free." But it would seem that women, at least single women through their twenties, are less interested in getting the ring and more interested in having fun while they can.

Meg, a 24 year-old graphic artist from Newton, says "I enjoy sex. Sometimes a relationship is too much to handle, and I have so much else going on in my life right now, I don't even really have time for one. But that doesn't mean that I'm going to be a nun until I have a boyfriend. Some of my friends won't sleep with someone unless there's some kind of bond there, but a lot of my friends will have sex just to have sex. Mostly, the guys I sleep with are people I know, but I've had one-night stands with guys I just met. I don't feel guilty about it," she adds, "It's my business."

There are, of course, opposing views. Not everyone engaged in the bar scene is in search of a casual encounter. At the Beacon Hill Pub, Sally, a first-year law student at Suffolk, puts it this way: "I can't just go home with someone. I have to get to know them first. I don't mind giving my number out to someone, but I want to know them before I sleep with them." Has she ever had a one-night stand? "Yeah, I've had two, but I always felt awful about it the next morning. I knew that I just did it because I was drunk. I'm also terrified of AIDS. After my second [one-night stand] I was awake every night for a week thinking that I was going to get it." She had not used a condom, partly, she says, "Because I'd been drinking, but partly because he seemed like a nice guy, and I just told myself I wouldn't get it."

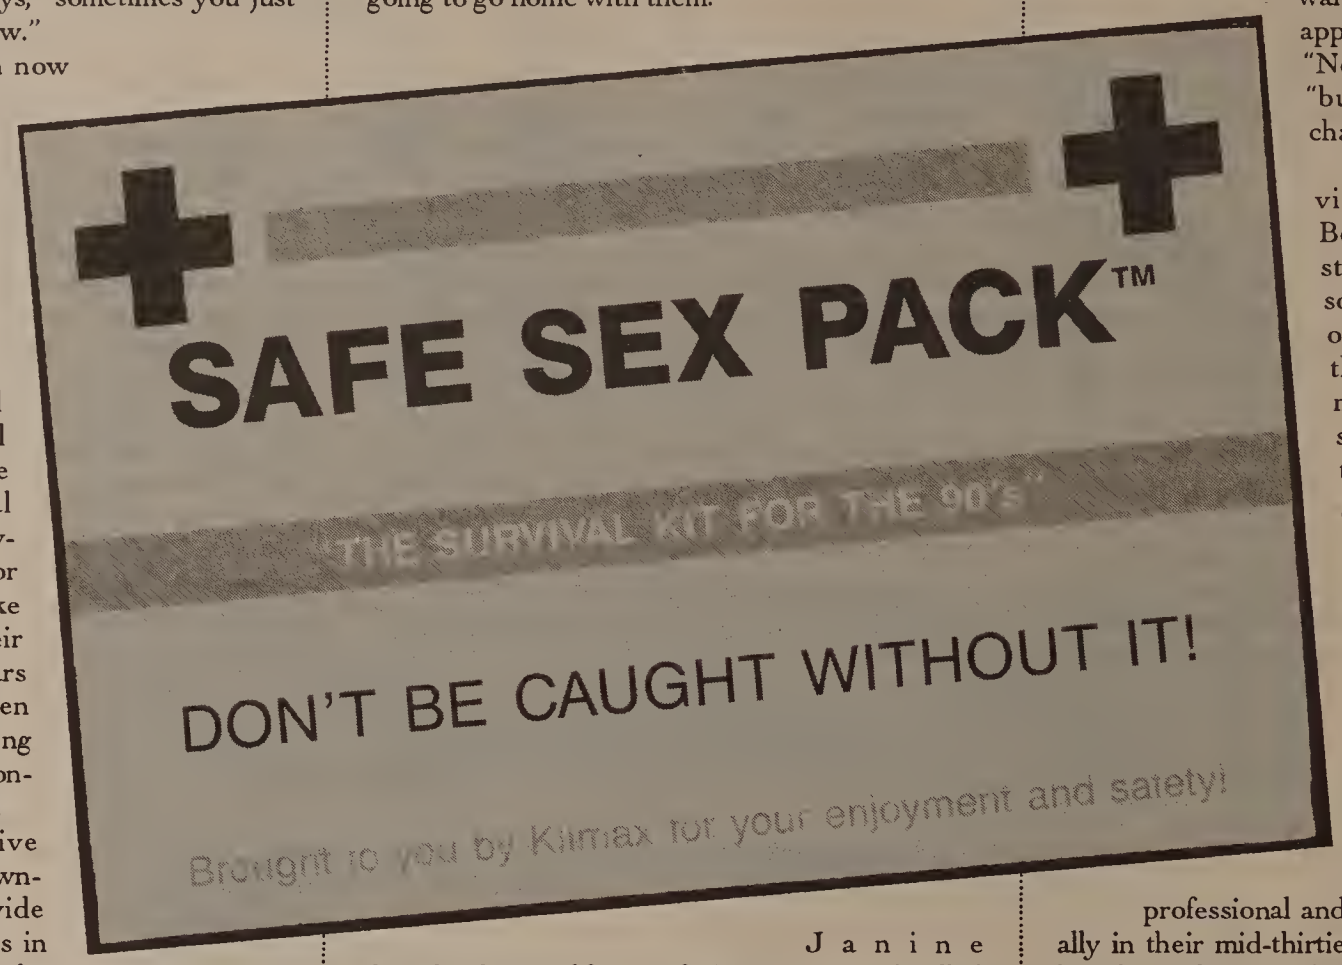
Wishful thinking is hardly adequate protection. You'd have to live on Mars these days not to know how deadly and wide-spread AIDS is, and that unprotected sex with multiple partners, homosexual, heterosexual or whatever-sexual, is the fastest-growing method of transmission.

The federal government has concluded that using condoms greatly reduces the risk of contracting a sexually transmittable disease, but the only 100 percent sure protection is abstinence. But how many people are conscientiously abstaining from sex, practicing safe sex, or being monogamous with a partner who's been tested?

Michelle Frost, a spokesperson for Fenway Community Health Center, which caters to a mainly gay male population, says that there is a definite increase in the number of heterosexual women coming in to be tested, and that more people are coming in to be tested now than a year ago. "There is a definite movement, and a definite change. People are getting the message and are more aware of the rising numbers [of AIDS victims]," she says. But are people changing their behavior? "It's hard to tell just from people coming into the test center. Wanting to be tested means that they are afraid that they have been exposed to the virus, but it doesn't mean that they are changing their behavior."

Women engaged in unprotected heterosexual sex are more at risk than their male partners, but Maureen, 30, a financial planner for a downtown firm who goes out at least twice a week and who has slept with four different men in the past month, says "I only used a condom with one of them.

Of the other three, two of them I already knew, and with the third I just let myself get carried away. I know it's stupid, but somehow you tell yourself it'll be okay." However, she adds, "In the morning you hear something on the news about [AIDS] and you start to freak out." Maureen had an AIDS test done last year that came back negative, and is considering going for another one. "But it's so scary," she says, "sometimes you just think you'd rather not know."



Many bars in Boston now have condom machines in their bathrooms, but many more do not make condoms available for their clientele. Boston City Councilor David Scondras has been pushing for legislation that would require any establishment which has a full alcohol license, a legal occupancy of 100 people or more, and an annual entertainment license covering more than just T.V. or background music, to make condoms available to their customers. Owners of bars and restaurants have been balking however, displaying an alarming reticence to confront the realities of AIDS.

Scondras' legislative aide, Chris Norris, says owners are reluctant to provide condoms on their premises in the belief that it ruins the "family" atmosphere of their establishments. "But," he argues, "if they have a full entertainment and liquor license, they're not really a Mom and Pop kind of place anyway. We're not forcing them to sell condoms, we're asking that they make condoms available in places where people are drinking and being entertained, to the extent to which they do anything, they can do it safely."

If you can't find condoms in the bar or club you hang out at, there are still options besides the corner drug store. Condoms have become almost a trendy accessory. What was once relegated to the back flap of a wallet or the back of a night-stand drawer is now in designer colors, and even flavors, and are displayed in flamboyant, eye-catching packaging. Aaron Cohen, the owner of Condom World on Newbury Street, opened his store in April of 1992, in the wake of other "condom boutiques" like Condomania in New York and Condom Sense in Portland, Maine. He says that while about 60 percent of their business comes from the novelty aspect of the store, with items like tee-shirts, flavored body oils, and joke condoms, there are many serious customers who appreciate the selection. "Some customers come in once a week and buy a couple dozen at a time. They must be pretty active, but at least they're using them."

In these dangerous times to be looking for love, the bar scene is scary and unsure for a lot of singles. What alternatives have sprung up to meet others with mutual interests, shared activities and values? You can always try a dating service.

Janine, 29, is an executive assistant in a banking firm. Pretty and outgoing, she doesn't look like she needs help meeting people. "I'm shy," she admits. "I don't have time to go out that much, but when I do go out, I don't really have a problem getting approached by guys in bars, but I do have a problem maintaining a conversation when I feel that they are only interested in whether or not I'm going to go home with them."

Janine thought she would try a dating service and called one in the Boston area. So far, she's gone out with two different men she met through the service, and says "The first guy was okay, not right for me, but he was nice and we had a good time. The second one was a nightmare. He was boring, he was disgusting when he ate, and I think he thought I wanted to go home with him!" She laughs, remembering. "In some ways it was better than the bars. At least I knew something about them before we went out, but there was still a feeling of pressure. When it's set up, it's not just a casual meeting, and you can feel awkward, and you can still be disappointed." Will she go back? "Not right away," she admits, "but I might give it another chance."

There are 32 dating services listed in the greater Boston area. Most of them stress lack of time for personal socializing and dislike of the bar scene as some of the reasons people become members. Some of these services specialize, catering to homosexuals, ethnic groups, or people who are HIV positive. How successful are these services? Who goes to them? Are they the last resort for people who can't find someone any other way? LunchDates, which claims to be "Boston's oldest locally-based dating service" claims that their clients are largely professional and educated. They are generally in their mid-thirties, and are not the lost and love-lorn of society, but people who want to meet someone "nice" and get to know them before jumping into the sack.

LunchDates claims that of 200 members who met their spouse through the service, 84 percent of

The Swinging '90s – Still Swapping

It's hard to believe a swing-scene could exist in this era shrouded by AIDS. It's even harder to imagine what kind of people would still be free-falling in such retro sex. All I could envision was ugliness—heinous spouses desperately seeking reprieve from themselves. Or, perhaps, modern-day sex-fiends - crazed Casanovas satiating themselves in the shock-value of an orgy. Either way, I wanted to find out more about it - strictly for the sake of journalism, of course.

Through a lifestyle (read: porn) magazine called Adam, I secured the address of the only swinging organization listed under Massachusetts: "The Sterling Club." Drafting my letter was difficult, but eventually I managed to suppress my kid-in-a-candy-store interest in the swing-scene down to an analytical tone not unlike that of a lab scientist: "After all, this would be just another responsible experiment for myself and my significant other."

If I could find a significant other, that is. Although no one accepted the "sake of journalism" thing, a woman I was dating named Sarah* finally succumbed to her tentative curiosity - and my incessant groveling.

A week after I mailed the letter, Ed called. (Just "Ed.") Ed was the Julie McCoy of the swing-scene: he organized the parties and the dances, sent out the mailings, and - "most importantly" - conducted the interviews. Something told me my interview had already begun. "What's the relationship you have with Sarah? Do you understand that we don't accept single men. How long have you been seriously involved with Sarah?"

I assured Ed we were a couple who had made the undying commitment to swing together for all eternity. He invited us to a bar in the Greater Boston-area for the final interview. It turned out to be more of a "Q&A" session as 10 to 15 other couples also on the breach of swing inundated Ed with questions on the art and etiquette of open sex. Here are his answers to the most common questions:

1. Is swinging legal? Ed skittered around this question for awhile but settled on this: swinging is only illegal in the same way that all sex out of wedlock has been illegal in MA since 1692. But (relax) not one case is cited in the Mass Court Reporter because such "layaway laws" simply aren't prosecuted.

the men and 91 percent of the women found mates who met all their criteria for a perfect companion. These people filled out checklists with priorities of what they desired in a member of the opposite sex, such as "Nice/considerate/warm, sense of humor, attractive/fit, self-confidence, and family values."

Great Expectations, a Newton-based dating service, claims to have over 135,000 members nationwide, and prospective love-seekers can screen out the losers via a video-taped interview. Their promotion says "You won't waste time on blind dates or meet the wrong types with our exclusive video screening approach." The previewing and prioritizing allow someone who is looking for a date to categorize and rate potential mates without the hassle of actually meeting them.

If you're looking for another alternative to the bar scene, but dating services sound too contrived, you can always sign up for a class geared towards singles, like those offered at the Boston Center for Adult Education. In their Singles Series, the BCAE offers classes for single professionals such as "Singles Beer Tasting," "The Art of Making Conversation," and "A Single's Guide to Dating and Mating." This last, for $31, is taught by Dr. Robert Heller, a psychologist who has worked extensively with singles and dating-related issues, and who has been teaching this particular course for thirteen years. The class gives students a crash course in "How and where to meet others; develop a dating strategy; and use a dating service or personal ad."

Dr. Heller says that his students are a broad mix of people, from young, never-married professionals to older widows or widowers who are back in the dating scene after a long absence. Asked why people seem to need so much help meeting others, he replied "Some of the students are new to town, some of them are shy and don't know how to initiate a conversation, and some are just exploring all the available dating options."

If, after all that instruction, you still need a few pointers on, say, how to create a personal ad, there are plenty of examples out there for you to choose from. The back pages of a surprising number of local magazines and newspapers display personal ads, ranging from the tame: "High energy guy seeks great looking, slim female who enjoys cycling, running, swimming and other more subdued pursuits," to the outright bizarre: "24 y.o. WM needs to have Dom females use his mouth as a toilet bowl."

Personal ads like these are a way to find someone who is willing to take that walk on the wilder side of the sex game. There's all kinds of action out there, but most of it comes under the heading of "seek and ye shall find." If you're looking for anything outside the usual range of sexual activity, you have to know first what you want: Bondage? Domination? Threesomes, foursomes or moresomes? After that, it's merely knowing where to look for it.

Unconventional sexual practices are more out in the open now than ever before, as evidenced by the extreme popularity of events like Man Ray in Cambridge's D & S (Dominance and Submission) nights hosted by "Mistress Diana" every other Friday. Is there a new acceptance of "kinky" sex, or is it just that more people are willing to talk about it and actively seek it out?

Susan Phelps, owner of Hubba Hubba in Cambridge, a boutique that caters to the naughty-minded, believes that unconventional sexual practices are definitely more wide-spread now than they were five years ago, and she thinks the trend is due, strange as it may seem, to AIDS.

"People are looking to get more fulfillment out of an existing relationship," she says, "they're trying to get more mileage out of their monogamous partners because they don't want to experiment with exotic sex with strangers anymore. Bondage and fantasy can add excitement without a new partner." She cites the fact that more and more of her customers are suited-up business men, sometimes with their wives. "The clientele is getting pretty mainstream."

If you don't want to jump into the naughty sex scene with both feet, you can ease yourself in with a call to a 900 number. All they require is a credit card and your phone, and there's no participation necessary. To get the fantasy of a kinky experience without the drawbacks of a personal encounter, you can dial "Vixen" or "Candy" or listen in on "Amateur Confessions." After choosing from a menu with options like "Horny Housewife," "Two Beautiful Women and What They Do When They're Alone Together," or "The Plumber," you can listen to what is supposedly the hottest phone sex available, aiming to produce your fantasies on demand.

These calls tend to be universally awful, prerecorded and scripted in a way that brings any erotic tension down to the level of a deodorant commercial. They do, however, provide the outlet of an erotic encounter without any of the risk. They might just be the new "safe sex," if you can find one that produces any kind of sexual stimulation at all.

Most single, mainstream Bostonians, however, are not looking for way-out options to deal with their social and sexual lives. It's more like performing a juggling act between fulfilling their sex drives and staying healthy. AIDS has not scared the masses into completely avoiding sex, but it has given them reason to rethink their priorities. Meg, the free-lance artist, says, "Sometimes it's tiring not having the stability of a relationship, but it's not like you can just go out and get one. In the meantime, I'm not celibate, but I am very careful. Sometimes I wonder what it would have been like to have had the sexual freedom we've achieved, without this plague hanging over our heads. Maybe we'll never know."

Spouses After All These Years

2. Do swingers practice safe-sex? Condoms are provided at parties. And although the HIV-neg swing group hasn't caught on yet, Ed insists that more swingers are using condoms than in the past - but it's your responsibility have it available.

3. Are most swingers bisexual? Although Ed estimates that one-half to two-thirds of the woman are bisexual - or at least bi-curious - he insists that he hasn't seen any bisexuality among men for the last five or six years - "mostly because of the fear of AIDS."

4. Who swings? Sterling attracts upper-to-middle-class professionals aged 30s, 40s, 20s, and 50s - in that order - according to Ed. He attributes the socially-select crop of "Sterling" to the screening process. Through a front called "The New England Couples Connection" Ed funnels inquiring swingers to the organizations that he believes would suit them best. "If one spouse comes to us in a beer-stained T-shirt, for example, they'll probably feel more comfortable in one of the clubs in Southern NH, Southeast Mass., or Providence RI because they cater to more of a - for lack of a better phrase - blue collar crowd." Most participants are married, some are couples - none are single men. "Our service is just too close to prostitution" explains Ed, as if he were upholding some sort of moral code, a code which is conveniently overlooked if the single man lives in a posh house and is willing to host a swing party. Especially now that "Sterling" has withdrawn from its rented suburban house because it wasn't covering its costs.

5. Are there rules to swinging? Believe it or not, there is some order to open sex. Most events include an area for socializing, as well as a number of different rooms that are available for couples interested in each other sexually. The rooms are categorized as follows: (a) Open room: This area is provided for your basic, free-for-all orgy; anyone in the room is fair game. It's also the only room an unescorted male or female may enter. (b) Semi-private: Though slightly more conservative than the open room, couples may still approach you, and you may still approach other couples. And as long as you're not shunted by a "No thank-you" then it's probably OK to join in. ("No thank-yous" can be expressed verbally, or more tacitly by a shake of the head or by moving away the newcomer's hand.) (c) Private room: for all intents and purposes, couples in private rooms are at separate parties. You may not approach another couple, and are entitled to the same respect. Mattresses may be curtained off for further privacy. And finally, although these specific rooms are governed by rules, sex is usually appropriate in any room except the bathroom.

Having successfully completed "Open Sex 101," Sarah and I were eager to compare the working-world of swing to its textbook counterpart. We chose to attend a "Sterling" dance, which were supposedly more conservative than the house-party gatherings.

Around 10 p.m. we arrived at the Ramada-like hotel located 15 minutes north of Boston. (Ed stopped arranging "Sterling" events in Boston for the sole reason that "The parking in Boston sucks.") We found the function hall and were cordially greeted as "Janet" checked our names off the guest list ("Tony and Sarah"). We paid our $30 per couple – which barely covers mailing costs and the evening's event, according to Ed - took two steps inside, five deep breaths, and scanned the scene. I couldn't believe it: 100 or so couples, and everyone looked...normal, like a scene out of your cousin's wedding. Men were dressed in jackets and ties; women in fashionable evening apparel - seductive yet refined. Aside from a few black–sheep uncle types with a tinge of 70s remnant in their dress, the crowd was generally upscale; the Deejay (continued on page 16)

Ivan Reitman's Capra-esque comedy gleefully sticks it to the Republicans. Kevin Kline is a delight as Dave Kovic, an exuberant, generous, small-town guy who so resembles the President (a mean tight-assed Yalie) that he becomes his full-time stand-in. Dave's agenda – giving people in need top priority – pits him against Bob, his reptilian Chief of Staff (the wonderful Frank Langella) and allies him with the estranged First Lady (Sigourney Weaver). Like its hero, the film is high-spirited, but it loses its edge and becomes cloying whenever more than one "nice" person is on the screen at a time. Dave is to the Fourth Estate and the Beltway what The Player is to Hollywood.

House of Cards

When her father dies in a freak accident, a young girl, Sally (Asha Menina), withdraws into her own autistic world. She builds a huge house of cards with a winding stairway in the hopes of reaching the moon where she believes her father lives. Sally's mother Ruth, an architect, (Kathleen Turner) tries to get inside her daughter's mind by building another "stairway to the moon" in the backyard. Meanwhile, the Department of Child Welfare wants to take Sally away. Several subplots such as the romance between Ruth and a child psychologist (Tommy Lee Jones) are never fully developed. The many loose ends include unexplained supernatural forces.

Last Action Hero

Summer movies should be no-brainer fun and this one definitely is. Using a "magic" ticket, Danny (Austin O'Brien) is transported into the movie world of his screen Idol, Jack Slater (Arnold Schwarzenegger). The two romp back and forth between Jack's world of make-believe (where get-away cars fly through the air and even the women behind the video store counters look like Hollywood starlets) and Danny's "reality" where the bad guys sometimes win. Those in the audience who insist on remaining adults can amuse themselves by identifying the many stars who appear in cameo roles and the various movie genre site gags and references.

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts – and there are many – don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. The only entertaining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs running amuck in Jurassic Park, and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill, and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

To paraphrase Gertrude Stein: Michael J. Fox is Michael J. Fox is Life With Mikey. A former child TV star (Fox) and his older brother (Nathan Lane) run a children's talent agency. The talent is wanting as is the agency. Open auditions produce the same star-wannabes with mothers in tow. The cute, recurring kid-bits underline the brothers' desperation for a meal-ticket talent. Christina Vidal cops a street-smart attitude, Mikey's wallet, and a contract as the Sunburst Cookie girl. She's just what is needed to push the agency to the brink of profitability. The film is pushed to the brink of sappy. But it's saved by Fox's Mikey. Like Fox, Mikey is charming in an off-handed way. So is this movie.

A brilliant, beautiful black teenager (Nia Long) and her smart, independent mother (Whoopi Goldberg) discover that the girl's sperm-donor father was not an accomplished black man, but a white yahoo (Ted Danson) who hawks cars on TV. The movie is annoying in spite of a likable cast. It only superficially explores the question of what makes a family. The animal acts; broad, mostly not-very-funny comic routines; and sentimental scenes would all play better on TV. But if your idea of a good time is watching a monkey and a trained bear upstage Ted Danson, and an elephant chase bicyclist Whoopi down the streets of San Francisco, by all means, see this movie.

The opening of director Kenneth Branagh's latest film is full of fun and promise as both men and women prepare themselves for the battle of the sexes. Beatrice (Emma Thompson) and Benedict (Kenneth Branagh) are worthy adversaries, precursors to all the smart, snappy, sexy, big screen couples we love. Hero (Kate Beckinsale) and Claudio (Robert Sean Leonard) are beautiful young lovers. When the vindictive Don John (Keanu Reeves) tricks Claudio into believing his love is a wanton hussy, the battle turns ugly. Finally, all's well that ends well. The movie slows down as the director relies more and more on close-ups to tell the story.

Sleepless in Seattle

No trouble sleeping here. A young boy from Seattle, Jonah Baldwin (Ross Malinger), phones a radio talk show and says his widowed dad needs a new wife. A woman in Baltimore, Annie Reed (Meg Ryan), becomes obsessed with the young caller and his father Sam (Tom Hanks) and realizes that she and her fiancé are mismatched. The premise is clever but the plot is rehashed. We get two hours of amusing, but all-too-familiar, "Will they (meet) or won't they?" Annie loses interest in her fiancé because there are no surprises in their relationship. Ditto our reaction to this movie. Still, Hanks and Ryan are great. Maybe next time they could do two scenes together.

A dizzying paean to a host of ace Hollywood cinematographers, from The Birth of a Nation's Billy Bitzer to Blue Velvet's Frederick Elmes. This wonderful documentary insists that it's the unheralded cameramen who often deserve the real credit for making movies soar as "art." Visions backs up its claim with scene after scene of magisterial visual splendor illustrating the signature talents of various Hollywood cameramen: Lee Garmes, William Daniels, Arthur Miller, Gregg Toland, then, and Caleb Deschanel, Vilmos Zsigsmond, Nestor Almendros, Gordon Willis, now. Do these names register? Only the cinematographers really know, and appreciate each other's work.

The Firm

"...A Cruise Character Is A Player, Even When, Especially When, He Chooses Not To Play..."

Risky Business (1983) catapulted Tom Cruise to fame and fortune, and its young protagonist's acquisitiveness, cheerful cynicism and unabashed selfishness helped define the Reagan era. The Firm has its roots in the 80s but attempts to move beyond them. It doesn't entirely succeed.

Hotshot Harvard Law School graduate Mitch McDeere (Tom Cruise) joins a small, exclusive Memphis law firm because they offer him big money. He soon learns he has made a deal with the devil. To save himself and his wife Abby (Jeanne Tripplehorn), he pits himself against three formidable, corrupt, and brutal opponents: his new law firm, the Mafia, and the FBI.

A LEGAL PRISON: Tom Cruise as lawyer Mitch McDeere & Gene Hackman as his designated mentor Avery Tolar

IF YOU GO

The Firm

Directed by Sydney Pollack
Based on the novel by John Grisham
Screenplay by Robert Towne & David Rayfiel.

The Firm gets off to a running start as a straightforward drama/thriller. It's as though director Sidney Pollack is urging us to hurry up and pay attention because we've got a lot of plot to get through. He establishes character and motive with decisive sledge-hammer blows. But there's little build-up and suspense and after a while we zone out.

The Firm is at its worst when it attempts to be a serious, literary, moody study of complex characters and relationships. The biggest sacrifice on the altar to literary pretension is Avery Tolar (Gene Hackman), Mitch's mentor. Avery may seem like a sleaze – and a damn good sleaze, too – but he's crying on the inside, a man in despair who loathes himself and longs for vicarious redemption through Mitch. But is a man who woos his charge's wife with lines such as "I can give you marital advice and hit on you." redeemable? And what about the writers who put the words in his mouth? Abby, too, is given her share of weighty lines such as "I loved you all my life, even before I knew you."

Mercifully, The Firm has some lively moments: quirky scenes with low-life characters who seem to have dropped in from other movies. Gary Busey as a private eye and Holly Hunter as his brassy secretary are out of a film noire spoof. When Busey disappears after a few minutes on screen, we feel sorrier for ourselves than we do for his character. David Strathairn is droll and engaging as Mitch's jailbird brother Ray, and the ever-disturbing Ed Harris is good as a high-strung, bullying FBI agent with a shaved head.

Mitch McDeere is a typical Tom Cruise character: likable, bright but not intellectual, ferociously competitive, somewhat corrupt but redeemable, sexy in a boy-next-door kind of way, a bit unpredictable but not dangerous. Cruise doesn't play marginal-fringe types: loners, eccentrics, or exaggerated, out-sized characters. His characters are always part of the mainstream; that's the source of Cruise's enormous appeal. A Cruise character is a player, even when, especially when, he chooses not to play. (Pollack establishes a curious relationship between Mitch and Afro-Americans in order, it seems, to make Mitch sympathetic, hip, and to dis-associate him from the establishment. It shows how far the mainstream has gone in appropriating black culture.)

Mitch gets to eat his cake and have it, too. He emerges from the fray, body and soul intact, with a big bank account. Why, when movie characters finally realize that money is not the most important thing in life, are they rewarded with – what else – money? Mitch even becomes idealistic about the law: it's not the system that is inherently corrupt or corrupting, rather institutions and individuals give the system a bad name. Mitch doesn't have to drop out. He can live his life with few strings attached while I Did It My Way plays endlessly in the background. ❑

THE LADY VANISHES?

MFA's "Early Hitchcock" / Liv Ullman's "Sofie" at the Coolidge

The French critics who wrote obsessively about him in the 1950s and 1960s won the day with Alfred Hitchcock, eventually persuading just about everyone that the master of suspense was far more than just a popular movie entertainer. Hitchcock the director, they demonstrated, was also a supreme formal stylist, a deep-thinking moralist, a filmmaker whose guilt-ridden Catholic view of the world casts a corrosive metaphysical shadow over even his lightest genre concoctments.

With Shadow of a Doubt, Notorious, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, North by Northwest, Vertigo, and Psycho, we are championing a handful-and-a-half of some the greatest films to emanate from Hollywood.

But what of Hitchcock's earlier years, before he came to America in 1939? Was there a long apprenticeship in Britain of workmanlike films? Or was young Alfred always a visual genius, immediately a magician of sound, inevitably a first-rate celluloid philosopher?

Until now, it's been a problem to tell. Although much British-period Hitchcock can be found at your local video store, most of the prints are faded, ghostly, and incomplete, and the sound tracks are scratchy and murky. Lots of the marble-mouthed English-accents simply get lost, making the intricate plots tedious to follow.

So let's celebrate the "Early Hitchcock" series of 14 programs at the Museum of Fine Arts starting in July and running through August. These are beautiful, new, reconstructed 35 mm prints of films Sir Alfred made in England between 1929 and 1937. Now we can see his work properly, and hear and understand what all those tight-jawed Brits are saying.

Where to begin? With the best of the series, a spanking new print of Hitchcock's classic The Lady-Vanishes (1938) showing on July 8. This is an irresistible spy saga of a nice old woman who mysteriously disappears, and of the sexy couple who chase after her Balkan kidnappers. The final shot is the most heartwarming in the whole of the Hitchcock oeuvre.

On July 15, check out Hitchcock's Sabotage (1936), a pre-World War II paranoia thriller based on Joseph Conrad's anarchist classic, The Secret Agent. It is most famous for the boy-carrying-a-time bomb sequence. July 22 brings the virtually unknown Rich and Strange (1931), which series curator Geoff Brown dares call "the most intriguing of all Hitchcock's British films," an almost plotless, and blood-less, tale of a young British suburban couple on an eccentric world cruise.

Looking to next month, the most rewarding British Hitchcocks on view are Murder (1930), on August 5; The 39 Steps (1935), August 12; Blackmail (1929), a silent film with piano accompaniment, August 19; Young and Innocent (1937), also on August 19, and my candidate for the most underrated film in the MFA series.

SOFIE.

Liv Ullman, star of many Ingmar Bergman films (Persona, Scenes from a Marriage, The Passion of Anna) makes a sterling career switch to screenwriter-director with this rich, passionate, philosophical tale of a young Jewish woman (Karen-Lise Mynster), growing up in Copenhagen at the end of the nineteenth century. Sofie is faced with a momentous decision: run away with the great love of her life, a Christian painter with a burning soul, or marry a likable dullard, who placates her family because he is an Orthodox Jew.

Sofie, adapted from a Henri Nathanson novel, is a Jewish Madame Bovary, more or less, and Ullman lets her tale unfold in a deliberately leisurely, contemplative manner: the 146 minute length approximates a long evening of easy-chair reading. The power of Ullman's story, through several decades of bar mitzvahs and kosher meals, births and deaths, grows and grows until the immensely moving climax.

Veteran Bergman actor Erland Josephson, Ullman's perennial co-star, steals the movie in a remarkable performance as Sofie's Orthodox father. As for the deft storytelling of Ullman (who, incidentally, is now a Boston resident),Sofie captured the Jury Prize at the 1992 Montreal World Film Festival. ❑

Walt Willey - From Daytime Drama to Nightclub Comedy

How To Lie On National T.V. and Become a Stand-Up Comedian."

STANDING ON HIS SOAPBOX: Comedian Walt Willey will be at the Comedy Connection on July 18

Soap actor and stand-up comedian Walt Willey never needed to wait for his turn at open mike nights. He never had to open for other comics, and he was never limited to five minute sets. Thanks to his immense popularity as Jackson Montgomery on the popular soap "All My Children," Willey leapfrogged into top billing at comedy spots across the country. "Jack," Willey says, "has opened a lot of doors for Walt."

Willey started on "All My Children" back in the early 80s as an extra, playing barflies, ambulance drivers, and the like. He also worked as an extra on "Saturday Night Live" during what he describes as "the season from Hell with Randy Quaid and Anthony Michael Hall." In 1987, following a short-term role on the now defunct "Ryan's Hope," Willey make his way back to "All My Children" to play Jackson Montgomery, Pine Valley's premiere legal, as well as its most eligible bachelor.

This past May, Willey and his one-time leading lady, Susan Lucci (a.k.a. Erica Kane), co-hosted the Daytime Emmy Awards. "I campaigned for that position quite heavily," he says. Having done stand up comedy, he feels, worked in his favor.

It was only a few years ago that Willey decided to pursue a sideline career in stand up comedy. "I launched my [comedy] career on Regis Philbin's show," he says. During an interview with Philbin, Willey, who had never done stand up before, decided to announce that he was "going back to stand up comedy. I said it to run up a flag," he says, "to see if anybody would salute it."

The Joker's Wild in New Haven, Conn., took the bait, and Willey ultimately paid for his lie. "I wrote a show, and I sucked," he admits. "I was drowning in my own sweat about five minutes into my set. The place was packed, and I was terrible."

He decided against booking any gigs immediately after that. Instead, he concentrated on writing a new and better set of material. "I learned from my mistakes," he says. "Then I started doing charity gigs, where I was one of several people doing different things. I was doing an AIDS benefit one night, and Chris Walken showed up. I may be the biggest Christopher Walken fan in the world. He laughed his ass off. He even asked for the manager to bring me to his table so that he might meet me. That was praise from Caesar as far as I'm concerned."

Due in part to that encouragement, Willey decided to try his hand at the comedy circuit again. He ended up doing one show with Regis Philbin, opening for Philbin's own comedy/music act. In a sense, Willey owed it to him. "I've thanked Regis numerous times for letting me lie on his show," Willey says, adding, "Of course, he didn't know I was."

Coordinating his comedy act with his day job is not as difficult as it was when he first started doing comedy. "When I first started, people were loathe to give me a Saturday night. They wanted me to do a Tuesday or a Wednesday so they could have two Saturday nights in terms of attendance. Now, my reputation has grown, and I put my foot down. I said, 'No, I'm not going to take any more days off work to do this. My job is on that show. I can't have the producers jumping through hoops so I can go play. Once I made that clear to these clubs, it's mostly all Saturday nights.'"

To please soap fans in his audience, Willey usually starts his act with a few minutes of "All My Children" jokes before moving into his own material. He even performs a song he wrote entitled "Here in Pine Valley" spoofing "All My Children," for which he updates the lyrics periodically as befits the plot twists.

It doesn't bother him that there are still people coming primarily to see "Jack Montgomery" as opposed to Walt Willey, the comedian. But in the midst of his third summer tour as he is, he points out that now "the people who come back [to my show] are coming to see Walt." ❑

Contemporary Art At Harvard

The Fogg Museum Lightens Up

The greatest hits approach to exhibition planning pays off handsomely in the case of "American Painting at Mid-Century: Highlights from a Private Collection" now on view at Harvard's Fogg Art Museum. The show contains 15 important examples of American painting created in New York during the "triumphant" years from 1948 to 1975. Almost all the artists are household names, and the anonymous collector clearly sought only choice pieces. The Boston public rarely has access to an outstanding private collection of 20th-century masters and, moreover, one so devoted to painting, a medium all but ignored in today's video age.

"The Kiss", Roy Lichtenstein, 1962

Strange as it may seem, Harvard has always been involved with contemporary art. The Fogg hosted the ICA's first exhibition in 1936, and the Harvard Society for Contemporary Art (1929-1936) exhibited such artists as O'Keefe and Calder. American Painting gives clear evidence that the present director of Harvard's art museums, James Cuno, plans to continue this distinguished tradition.

The exhibition opens on an irreverent note. From the top of the entrance stairs, one cannot help but notice that the museum's Italian Loggia frames three exuberant abstract paintings. Perhaps Harvard is parodying its own traditionalism? Even the exhibition's title, which is displayed in bold colors on the entrance wall, is a take-off of Jasper John's adjoining Target with Plaster Casts (1955). Hanging on the outside walls of the galleries, smaller pieces by Pollock and de Kooning encourage close study of the artists' calligraphic and gestural approach to painting.

"Before and After", Andy Warhol, 1960

The rich strawberry color of Cy Twombly's Red Painting (1961) beckons one inside the first gallery. Directly across, Arbeit Macht Frei (1959), from the celebrated series of "Black Paintings" by Frank Stella, occupies a wall of its own. Huge and profoundly dark, the picture's repetitive impersonal geometry speaks of modern tragedy and dull misery. Franz Kline's Untitled (1957) adds a threatening note with his architectonic forms. The painting does seem actually to incorporate visitors who are dressed in similar colors. Across the room, Kline's influence on his friend de Kooning is obvious: In February (1957), the artist's brushstroke has become a swath of color that creates large rugged forms. Ambiguous objects from the real world invite free association (penis or lighthouse? I can't decide.) Nobody embodied the idea that the act of painting is supreme more than de Kooning's close associate, Pollock, whose tightly constructed drip painting Number 5 (1948) weaves an iron web of surprising depth.

From this kettle of abstraction, Roy Lichtenstein and Andy Warhol burst onto the scene like so much Pop-corn. Using the vocabulary of mass media, both sought to magnify the printed page and thus pose fundamental questions about the nature of the very art that made them rich. Lichtenstein's The Kiss (1962) employs film technique (cropping and close-up) to produce bourgeois romance and supply the end to Casablanca that you always wanted. Warhol, who originated the technique of multiple images, parodies a common cosmetic procedure in Before and After (1960). Which is before and which is after? Who nose?

Although small, "American Painting" presents a cohesive summary of a vital period in American 20th-century art. Encore! ❑

The Coming of Adult Films

A Guide To The Porn Videos Your Well-Respected Friends Are Renting

The day has finally arrived where even the most conservative professional feels comfortable walking into the neighborhood video store, handing the last copy of Orgasm Alley (Western Visuals) (seriously) to the elderly cashier who looks remarkably like their mother, and swearing on the Bible that it's for a Secret Government Project. And with all of this newfound acceptance and respect for adult films – also known as Porn-Flicks, P-Flicks, Skin Shots, Wild Romp Reels, Meat-Motion Pics and Do-Me-While-Pee Wee Herman Gets Arrested Tapes – comes the public's desire to keep abreast (couldn't resist) of its porn-video options.

That's where I come in. Over the last three days I've compiled this definitive Guide to Boston's Porn-Video Trends (won't Mom be proud), which outlines the videos currently available, as well as which ones are being rented most often.

I hope you enjoy it. I certainly enjoyed doing the research for it. (Just kidding, Mom.)

Mainstream Videos

If you'd like to ease your way into the Wonderful World of Nudie Films, you could begin by renting a few of the more sultry mainstream movies. The first one that comes to mind (as if it weren't always there) is 9 1/2 Weeks, which features Kim Basinger having sex with all four food groups while romantic Mickey Rourke says things like: "Ya Hussy take that whole zucchini into your mouth, jump up and down on your right leg, keep juggling those olives, Tramp, and you'd better start singing 'Happy Birthday' to me in Spanish or you'll be doing this whole damn obstacle course over again!" Other equally hot flicks include Wild Orchid (sort of a sequel to 9 1/2 Weeks – same Mick, new squeeze), Blue Velvet (Holy Wacked Fetishes, Batman), Bolero (Bo knows nudity), and Henry and June (Henry Miller's literarily-justified exploits).

But perhaps you require a tad more skin than R-rating has to offer. Yet you're still not comfortable gawking at Bend-Over Babes 3 with your significant other. Fret not. The ever-resourceful adult film industry has developed a solution to this very dilemma: Instructional Sex Videos.

Instructional Sex Videos

Although far more explicit than mainstream movies, instructional sex videos are still extremely respectable because they feature wild, frenzied couples doing the nasty for Educational Purposes only. Here's a list of the most popular ones:

1. Secrets of Making Love...to the Same Person Forever. Playboy's rather tame answer to marital monotony.
2. 101 Ways to Excite Your Lover. Playboy again; equally attractive models, equally hokey production.
3. The Great Sex Series. Informative yet painfully narrated by sexologist (defined as "One Who Panhandles Sex Tapes") Frank Sommers.
4. The Better Sex Videos. Shallow instruction broken up into eight different videos to fully achieve the 500 Colors Of Karate Belts Scam.
5. Intimacy and Sexual Ecstasy. Ancient Tantric yoga, and the fine art of using Ben-Wa Balls - what else needs to be said? (Except: "Honey, are you sure you put them in there?")

Remember: if at any time does the narrating Sex Therapist get naked to demonstrate a technique ("I am now engaging in the Chinese Basket position.") then you've probably already graduated to the next stage of adult-video viewing: hard-core porn.

Hard-Core Porn. (Welcome.)

According to a recent Improper poll taken by me over the course of five or six billion phone calls, an average of 30 percent of the movies rented in Boston video stores are adult films. And since I'm only renting adult films Wednesday through Saturday nights, it means there's a whole lot of other ~~respectable, professional, mature~~ people renting them too.

To help set your Adult Film Agenda, I've listed both the porn flicks your friends are currently renting most often, as well as the ones they've been renting most often since well before it was acceptable to rent adult films. I'm sure you can wing it from there.

Boston's Recent Top Porn Picks

1. Butt Man's European Vacation. Not the Griswolds. Not a gay video either, but easily could be.
2. Chameleon. Tory Wells has a set of acting skills like you wouldn't believe, and like I wouldn't even consider mentioning in a politically correct column such as this one.
3. Face Dance 2. Some faces, some dancing; though I'd have to actually see the film to be sure.
4. Totally Teri. Not to be confused with Chameleon's Tory Wells, unless, of course, you want to.

Boston's All-Time Classic Porn Picks

1. Deep Throat. A major scientific breakthrough.
2. Night Trips 2. Blake's cinematography is excellent. And Paula Price's naked body doesn't hurt the film either.
3. Night Trips 1. No Paula, but plenty of other naked people, so just relax.
4. Debbie Does Dallas. Debbie has officially done everything; but Dallas is still her most popular conquest.
5. Long Dong Silver. You call that a penis?

And there you have it: a handy referral guide for your next wholesome Saturday night with the VCR. See you in the Adult section. ❑ played top-40/slow-classic dance music. No one was even frothing at the mouth.

The Swinging '90s – Still Swapping Spouses After All These Years

Sarah and I needed drinks, not to mention a few shots. At the cash bar we met David and Jen. The bartender brought their drinks over at the same time as ours and asked David if the drinks were together. "That'll be fine," he said, and paid for them. After stammering something about getting next round, all I could fumble out was to ask if they came to these things often. (So suave.) David, a tall, somewhat-courtly 30-something with a meticulously-groomed beard, said he and his wife Jen come to about three or four of the "Sterling" dances a year, but had never been to a house party. "We enjoy getting dressed up and going dancing" said Jen, "It's an exciting change of pace and a chance to see the friends we've made with this group over the years."

Five years, to be exact. David and Jen got involved in the swing scene when one of the more outgoing couples in David's computer consulting firm told us him about their experience. "They're a little more open to new experiences than we are, but they explained to us it could be as innocent as we wanted it to be - and for the most part it has been," insisted David. "These dances are more of an exciting social scene for us, rather than a sexual outlet." David and Jen have recently moved from Beacon Hill to Newton with their three children. Because he does most of his consulting from the office in his house, he's able to circumvent the kids by giving swingers his office number only. They've yet to have a problem.

David and Jen definitely fostered us into the swing scene, introducing us to most of the couples they enjoyed seeing at these events. And although one woman pinched my butt and then proceeded to grope her husband's office phone number into my back-pocket, the majority of exchanges followed classic courting process: introduction, light wit/general interests developing into more heartfelt confiding. The contacts we made ranged from Peter and Marina - a late-twenties, Euro-beautiful couple decked in Armani-wear, dark skin, and patronizing smiles - to Frank and Linda, a married, forty-something couple bursting with comic one-liners; personable and charismatic - though Frank was slightly stocky (a/k/a fat), and was sporting some type of frizzy-mustache experiment. Sarah and I didn't care - we were in it for the chase.

A chase which, for 20 to 25 of the more persevering couples, led to the post-dance "hospitality" rooms. The two rooms, reserved under a false Italian name were connected by open partition-doors. Both rooms were bathed in seedy red lighting and resonated slow, pulsing dance music. People drank B.Y.O.Beer stashed in the kitchen fridge. One room for drinking, small talk, organizing; the other room reserved for getting down to business.

The situation in the first room was comical: We engaged in prim-and-proper small-talk to the background sounds of primal grunting and an occasional "YA BABY! YES!" John and Kelly, an attractive, artsy South End couple in their mid-thirties, still thought it was comical even after eight years of swinging together. Their swing introduction came when John, an investment banker and "permanently budding" screenwriter, clipped "Sterling's" Phoenix classified-ad for Kelly. "I wanted to try it," says Kelly, "probably because I've always been the good girl - oldest daughter, Catholic prep, ivy-league - and it feels good not to be one once in awhile." After teasing Kelly with a "Tsk, tsk," John explained that his enjoyment didn't come from breaking the rules but instead from taking chances on something that was potentially risky but extremely exciting. He went on to liken swinging to everything from corporate raiding to bungee-cord jumping. And although the jealousy-aspect of swinging can be titillating, John says he'd rather swing in a separate room from Kelly and her partner. Even when they go to the swinging conventions in St. Louis or Nevada, he still prefers being one-on-one. Later he admitted that much of his same-room anxiety stemmed from the common occurrence of sexual stage-fright.

As for myself, I hadn't even the seen the stage yet, and the night was drawing to a close. So on pretend-run #3 to the bathroom, I finally mustered the courage to make a darting right turn, and stumble abruptly through the swing-room's doorway. Surprisingly, my stumbling didn't disrupt the swingers one bit. And neither did the sound of my chin. dropping to floor. What did disrupt the swingers was some gauche, schoolboy who took over my body just long enough to yell out: "OH...MY...GOD," and then left me to squirm in the embarrassment. Both intertwined couples looked right up at me in disbelief. And then smiled. And then went right back to having sex. Referring back to Ed's room-categories, I'd have to say this room fell under the Semi-private heading because, although only two couples were present, there was a whole lot of interaction going on. One woman was straddling a prone man while she was being kissed and massaged by the other man and woman, both of whom were kneeling on either side of her (see diagram) (just kidding). I couldn't believe this stuff actually went on.

Around 3 a.m. Sarah and I were ready to go home and said our good-byes to the promises of near-future dinners and dancing. Once inside the car, Sarah made me swear to secrecy for the 16-millionth time. For even though she was admittedly impressed at how normal the swing crowd was, she was also wary of the stigma open sex still held for most people.

As to whether or not Sarah and I actually participated in the sexual frenzy of the swing-scene, my responsibility as a professional journalist compels me to state, for the record, that I'm not telling. ❑

If it were a planet, it would be Pluto. An island in the stream. A speck of rock in some parallel universe. Remote. Isolated. As far from reality as we know it or could ever begin to imagine or comprehend it.

We realize another bottled water is the farthest thing from your mind. May we suggest one that's even farther?

until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

Iceland is like no other place on earth. Within a whisper of the Arctic Circle, it is enveloped by the sea. So apart is it from the rest of the world, you could journey south and not see land again until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

As you can well imagine, the air here is remarkably clear, the land virtually indistinguishable from that which it has been for millennia. And the water. Let us tell you about the water.

We call it Akva. A spring water that flows up from a place far below the ice and rock. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled. And of such a purity that it is difficult, if' not impossible to conceive of another quite like it.

We think you will agree once you've tried Akva for yourself. What you will discover is a surprisingly soft taste. Crisp. Clear. Free of sodium. Free of impurities of every sort. The end result of a natural, geophysical purifying process unique to Iceland.

We can understand, of course, your lack of excitement upon hearing the news of yet another spring water. There are, we know, so many. All of which would have you believe they are the purest thing since the angels. We do think, however, you will find Akva refreshingly different and worth the modest price of sampling. To do so, we suggest your favorite corner market or deli.

There now, you see? It's just like we've already told you. There really does exist a chance to find a genuinely pure water in this world. Even if it is a bit remote.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

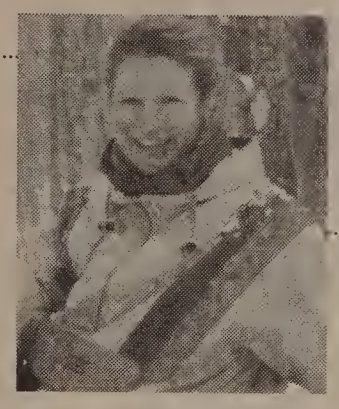
WOMAN ON THE STREET

"If you could be invisible for a day..."

BY LESLIE



Rob, 28, Beacon Hill
"I'd be sitting in Lou Gorman's office and eating all of his chocolates, so he could read the scouting reports."

Sean, 25, Wellesley
"I would be hanging with Madonna watching her express herself."

Maureen, 30, Brighton
"I'd listen to this guy talking to his friends and find out what he really thinks of me. He likes to keep me guessing."

Mimi, 29, Cambridge
"I'd walk around the streets of Boston and feel safe for once."

Lauren, 26, Allston
"I think I'd spy on my old boyfriends for curiousity's sake."

George, 35, Cambridge
"I would play tricks on people who were jerks to me."

IM/PROPER ATTIRE

Fashion Dos and Don'ts

"Oh my God, what if someone I know sees me with this perspiring plebeian?" Yes folks, you too in all your fashion finery may be embarrassed by the company you keep – this Bostonian was. Needless to say, rings of excess armpit moisture are not in style; never were, never will be. Moral of the story: never let them see you sweat.

With the hundreds of magazines, advertisements, pamphlets, and commercials that continually bombard us with conflicting advice on fashion, The Improper Bostonian now offers a solution to ease our already cluttered and misled couture consciousness. In short, one simple column, "Im/Proper Attire," that shows you all you need to know about the latest trends in fashion, as well as how to and how not to wear them.

(This, incidentally, is a point most magazines fail to reveal. We've all watched designer disasters parade past as we've sipped iced cappuccino at an outdoor Newbury Street cafe. It appears that just because one owns a Versace creation does not mean that one can wear it well, let alone accessorize it properly!)

This week we take a look at the summer that sizzles: how to look and feel cool and collected when the mercury starts rising.

Horrors! Did Goodwill have a sale? These leggings and heavy, horizontally striped garments are definitely improper attire for a sweltering summer day, (not to mention a brutal eye-sore!) Ah, but feast your eyes on this proper Bostonian: this crisp vest paired with flowing flowered pants looks as cool and comfortable as it must feel.

Straight from the Armani store window we see the versatility of the bathing suit this season. This unsuspecting Bostonian has something to smile about with the street-smart look of a sleek bathing suit perfectly paired with loose linen shorts.

Until next time - beware Boston, we're watching you!

Dining Review / R.E. Brunson

HARVARD ST. GRILL

"... The Food Was Found to Be Both Adventurous" and Creative With a Touch of Humor ..."

When dining at a restaurant where the chef/owner is in the kitchen, there is heightened expectation that the meal will truly be a special one and reflect the personal vision and creativity of the chef. Our group was not disappointed on our visit to the Harvard Street Grill - the food was found to be both adventurous and creative with a touch of humor.

The restaurant itself is a small storefront with peach colored walls, low lighting, and a shiny steel open kitchen in the back. The meal began with a pair of appetizers: the Coach Farm goat cheese with focaccia ($7.75), and the miso-marinated tofu with sweet and sour vegetables ($6.75). The goat cheese was covered with chopped chives and accompanied by a half dozen thin, crispy wedges of rosemary and cracked pepper focaccia. It also came with a wonderful spread of capers and sundried tomatoes balanced by a small salad of radicchio, watercress, and endive. Food for the eye as well as the palate. The miso-marinated tofu with sweet and sour vegetables came arranged in a dramatic vertical presentation: on a bed of watercress tossed in chili-garlic sauce, thin slices of tofu were piled high and layered with more watercress and finely chopped carrots, mushrooms, and gherkins. A reddish ring of sweet sauce that surrounded the whole construction provided a nice contrast. With the help of the wine, a Chateauneuf-du-Pape ($30), the two appetizers had really set the taste buds in action.

For entrees, the group chose the Maryland soft shell crabs ($23), the grilled boneless breast of duck ($17.95), and the loin of pork with curry glaze ($15.95). The soft shell crabs were simply and expertly sauteed in butter, lemon, and parsley. The three crabs were delicious, hot and tender. Thin strips of carrot, leek, and scallion made a resting place for the crabs with the crowning touch an edible flower.

The grilled boneless breast of duck was also beautifully prepared and garnished. The pink-centered duck slices made our mouth water. They were surrounded by a pool of pink pepper and cherry-red onion marmalade. The marmalade had a complex, slightly sweet flavor from the caramelized onions and a mildly tart flavor from the cherries - it was fantastic with the duck. An amusing toast duck backed by a mound of sprouts completed the dish. The final entree, the loin of pork with curry glaze, was nicely grilled and also had an interesting vertical presentation. The slices of loin were placed atop one another and jauntily crowned with one of the rib bones. The loin was tender and moist with an exotic curry flavor. A bed of lentil pilaf accompanied the loin along with a rich sweet tomato chutney.

We forged ahead to dessert and sampled both the chocolate ganache flan ($5.25) and the lemon cream tart ($5). The flan was not a flan at all but rather a thick rich wedge of creamy chocolate ganache on a crunchy pecan base.with a caramel sauce all around. Strictly the stuff for chocolate lovers. The lemon cream tart was also delicious with a tart lemon filling covered with a blueberry sauce. We left the restaurant impressed not only with the complexity of the flavors but also with the creative presentation. ❑

Chianti Classico

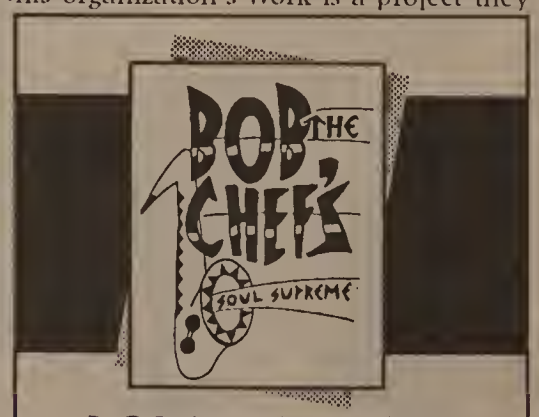
"...That Most Quintessential of Italian Red Wines..."

Hugh Johnson, dean of British wine writers, was probably not far off when he said that on the whole Italians are the world's least neurotic wine-drinkers. Maybe this is because Italy enjoys wine with its meals and leaves analyzing the life out of it to other nations.

A comprehensive tasting of Chianti Classico, that most quintessential of Italian red wines, provides an adventure in aroma and flavor diversity. The wide variations positively invite some attempt at explanation. While winemaking styles differ, the structure, the grip, and the underlying acidity of the Sangiovese grape lend a common unifying element.

A good Chianti's tart cherry flavors should start early on the palate and carry right through to the wine's finish, making it an ideal dinner wine. To my thinking, Chiantis never seem balanced if too soft in texture; there must always be an edge of high-pitched acidity so that upon tasting the wine our mouth waters for some bistecca, grilled chicken, or risotto. This, of course, presupposes enough richness of fruit extract so that the biting tartness does not dominate a thin or otherwise flavorless wine.

These essential requirements were never clearer than on a recent occasion when several dozen members of the Chianti Classico Black Rooster Consorzio arrived on the East and West Coast to present their wares. This organization was founded in the heart of Tuscany's Chianti production zone in 1924 by wine producers concerned with defending the region's quality image. Over the years, the voluntary group has probably done more to keep the level of quality and wine-making practices in the zone high than the Italian government itself. Its standards are more rigorous than those required by Italian law, and because well over 80% of the area's growers are members, what the Consorzio decides has a determining impact on the region's image.



An especially exciting component of this organization's work is a project they refer to as Chianti 2000, which is a long term effort designed to provide scientific answers to how the best Chianti Classico can be grown and produced. For decades, Chianti prices were low and the wine was dismissed as a frivolous novelty in a straw basket. Because their commercial position was weak, Tuscan winemakers planted inferior clones, pushing production levels beyond acceptable limits. This reinforced the region's already tarnished reputation.

Chianti 2000 examines such issues as where the vines should be planted, which vines to plant and how closely together, how they should be trained, how the soil should be treated, and such production issues as ideal fermentation temperatures and the length of time finished wine should remain in contact with grapeskins. Experiments are ongoing and the information is shared among all participating companies. The overall impression is of Chianti Classico boldly and confidently moving into the future.

Having noted this, there is a particularly disturbing general disregard for certain aspects of the Italian wine laws, and this in a nation whose overall exports have been crippled over the years by a succession of frauds and scandals emanating from unscrupulous producers of cheap jug wine. Discussions with winemakers, for instance, revealed that virtually no quality-conscious Chianti Classico follows the stipulation that at least 2% of the grapes in the blend must be white. The issue is complicated; while there is not a single voice advocating that this mandatory inclusion of white grapes improves Chianti Classico, it remains the law. When reminded of this inconvenient fact, winemakers shrug, wink, evade the question, and point out how the law will probably soon be changed. This quite openly casual "interpretation" of the regulations to suit the winemakers' own needs does little to build consumer confidence in the export markets.

Tasting the wines, on the other hand, unleashes tremendous enthusiasm, particularly on the heels of Chianti's great 1988 and 1990 vintages. Overall the Classicos are very ripe and concentrated. The best, those with ample reserves of palate-enlivening acidity to offset the black cherry spice, make me want to stop sniffing and swirling the glass and start broiling and sautéing an Italian meal to be accompanied by this fine dinner wine. ❑

". . . Another Season, Plus Plenty of Picnics, Bountiful Barbecues and a Crabfest . . ."

HIT ONE FOR US!

At Skipjack's crabfest there will be pounding mallets and crabs galore. From July 26 through August 1, Skipjack's will have the crabfest at all three of the restaurant's locations - Copley Square, Harvard Square, and Brookline Village. Every night, from 3:30 p.m. to closing, the restaurants will be transformed into authentic crab houses, complete with brown paper table covers, sawdust on the floor, wooden mallets, and an endless supply of buckets of steaming blue crabs.

David Ball

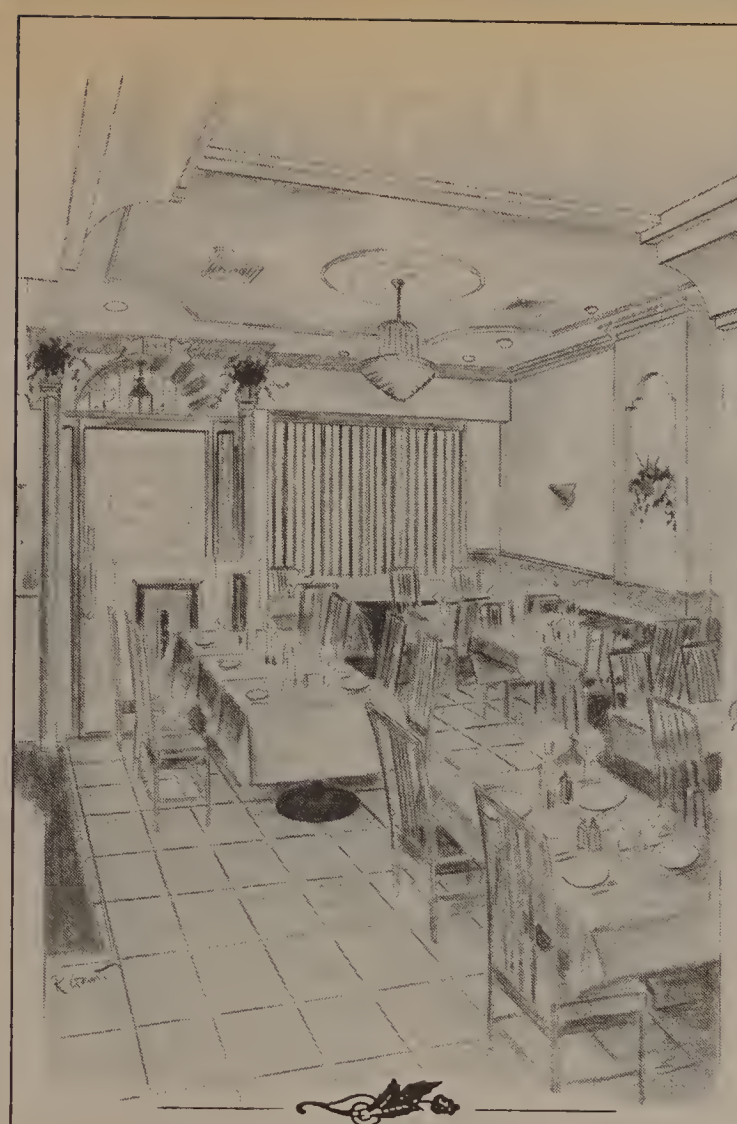
Newly opened Rosalita's Texas Backyard B.B.Q. describes its fare as "Amerimex"

There will also be plenty of those wonderful Maryland soft shelled crabs. Every recipe imaginable from crab chowder and crab cakes to crab gumbo will be available, along with side orders of seasoned fries, beer-battered onion rings, and corn on the cob. So order a bucket and be careful where you swing that mallet.

VIVE LA FRANCE

The 4th is over, and that means Bastille Day is just around the corner. Mellea Vineyards in West Dudley plans to celebrate the French holiday in grand style with their Great Bastille Weekend. On Saturday, July 10 and Sunday, July 11, Mellea will offer samples of food from local French restaurants, accompanied by French music and art. Of course, Mellea's wine will also be flowing - be sure to try the new, Colonial Cuvee red and the just-released Chardonnay. The festivities run from noon to 5 p.m. both days and there is a stream and grassy hill in back of the winery for fans of the outdoors. The charge is just $2. For directions and information call (508) 943-5166.

PICNIC IN PARADISE



If one goes to Mellea on Saturday, then Sunday, July 11, is open for the elegant Picnic in Paradise '93 at Sakonnet Vineyards in Little Compton, Rhode Island. The star wineries of the New England Coastal Wine Group will be filling glasses and famous chefs from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New York City will be filling picnic baskets with wonderful food on the lawn of the Sakonnet house from 2-6 p.m. Some of the participating chefs are: Tony Ambrose former chef of the Bostonian Hotel; Chris Douglass - Icarus, George Germon and Johanne Killeen - Al Forno, Pat and Bruce Tillinghast- New Rivers, and Steve Lyle - The Odeon. Music will be provided by Sun Steel, one of Boston's premier reggae/calypso bands. Prizes will be given for the most creative picnic basket and leisure activities such as volleyball and croquet will be offered. The fee is $37.50 per person and reservations can be made by calling the Sakonnet vineyards, (401) 635-8486.

BACKYARD B.B.Q.

Rosalita's Texas Backyard B.B.Q. on Church Street in Harvard Square opened last week with a bang and a big bash. Everyone was there. The new chef is Cliff Roy who comes from Rocco's, as does Chef Danny Weisel of Armadillo Cafe who directed the set-up of the new restaurant. The food is "Amerimex," which features Texas barbecue dishes like ribs, smoked brisket, and smoked chicken, as well as south of the border specialties like burritos and enchiladas. All items are very reasonably priced, with most entrees under $10. And if you purchase an entree, there is unlimited grazing at the picnic buffet table. Rosalita's hand can also be seen throughout the menu with specials like Rosalita's Whim and her special sauces. So if you're looking for a backyard barbecue without all the work, take a trip to Rosalita's.

FAR EASTERN DELIGHTS

Another Season restaurant on Beacon Hill continues their prix fixe menus into the summer with a variety of exotic dishes from the Far East. The menus are offered Monday-Thursday evenings in addition to the regular menu and the price is $20 per person. The featured locales for the next several weeks are Korea, July 5-8, Sri Lanka, July 12-15, and China, July 19-22. The Sri Lankan menu looks particularly interesting, with grilled marinated fish and a hot roti filled with potato, cauliflower, and spices. Summer Sleepers

Tribe's New Album Could be Boston's Summer Sleeper Hit, While Peter Gabriel Digs in the Dirt, and Arrested Development Heads to Lollapalooza

Tribe's new album could be the "Sleeper" hit of the year. At least it brings the Boston quintet another step on the road of evolution from local favorites to national pop contenders. Due in stores July 13, Sleeper is the band's first album to feature all new material and be released with the full strength of Warner Brothers behind it.

On first listen, Sleeper doesn't stand up to Abort, Tribe's debut on the Warners-distributed Slash label. That doesn't mean there aren't gems on Tribe's latest, starting with the seductive glide of "Red Rover," a viable successor to local radio hit "Joyride."

Of course, the idea is to break beyond Boston, something Tribe began to do with Abort, performing nationally and in Europe. "I'm not interested in being part of any particular scene really," lead singer Janet LaValley says. "We just kinda do what we do."

For Sleeper, the group hooked up with producer John Porter (School of Fish, the Smiths) and went for more of a live sound. "We've grown in terms of writing and what we want to get across," LaValley says, "and the knowledge of how a song is put together in the studio, how to get a certain sound, and what the vibe is we're going for."

Other vibe-capturing new tracks include the pithy "Supercollider" (about an atom smasher) and atmospheric ballad "Nevermind." The material is mostly written by keyboardist/singer Terri Barous, bassist Greg LoPiccolo and guitarist Eric Brosius, with lyrical help from LaValley.

"As far as lyrics go, Terri and Greg are really good lyricists, so it's not a difficult thing for me to enter into the experience of the song," she says, on the phone from the band's rehearsal space, a home where every member but LaValley lived when Tribe began in 1986 (Barous and Brosius still reside there).

However, Tribe recently encountered its first personnel change with the departure of drummer David Penzo "It was an amiable parting of the ways," LaValley says. "We had grown apart." He has been replaced by Mike Levesque (Modern Farmer, American Gladiators UK, Jennifer Trynin Band, etc.), who has joined for hometown dates at Venus de Milo July 12 (a record release party for media), Avalon July 14 and the Paradise July 15.

Three shows? "It's Tribe week," LaValley says with a laugh. Got to please those local fans.

Gabriel's Zoo?

Peter Gabriel noted on an awards show last year that U2's "Zoo TV" was the only recent tour he saw multiple times, and that admiration was evident at his recent Worcester concerts. He one-upped U2 by turning a circular satellite stage into a full-fledged second stage, and supplanting Bono's video cam-on-the-face spin with a claustrophobic mini-camera that turned portions of his face into a fisheye horror during "Digging in the Dirt." It was one of the few times during Gabriel's spectacular show, however, that he dropped the sometimes stiff grand-scale choreography that also marked the "Zoo TV" tour for the insular intensity of his past.

A SLEEPER HIT?: Tribes new album "Sleeper" is due in stores on July 13th

Elsewhere

X's comeback album Hey Zeus! delivers a garagey new bang that bodes well for its July 10 Axis date. Spin Doctors team with Soul Asylum and Screaming Trees at Great Woods July 13. But look for Lollapalooza to wreak havoc on Quonset State Airport in Rhode Island July 17 , thanks to Arrested Development (in its local debut), Alice in Chains, (the boring) Primus, Fishbone, Dino Jr., et al.

The Grave: A Fine and Public Place

The Boston Camerata's Requiem

It's difficult to think of the phrase "early music" without picturing bearded German women scrubbing away on bass viols. Joel Cohen and his early music group, the Boston Camerata, have done a great deal to dispel that image. Their new compact disc recording, a performance of Jean Gilles' Requiem (Erato 45989-2), provides a fine example of an early music performance that is at once elegant and compelling.

Gilles' Requiem is a work that demands tremendous poise and refinement. It was the mass-setting played at the funeral of Louis XV; and though it wasn't written specifically for that event, it was presumably chosen because it conveyed the kind of pomp and nobility suitable to a king's funeral rites. Whereas we now expect a requiem mass to be dreary and involve a lot of brooding and runny mascara, the French court of this period saw royal burial rites in particular as important political statements.

Perhaps the most extreme and stagey example is Charpentier's funeral music for Queen Marie-Therese; it actually involves frisky shepherds capering and singing, egged on by an angel and three big Virtues. Their "For she was a jolly good fellow" attitude cloaks the fact that the Queen was largely unlamented as the King was itching to marry his most recent mistress. In these works, death was not portrayed as truly disastrous, because the royal family had to maintain a decorous facade of absolute spiritual and political power to keep that whole hokey Divine Right story from blowing over and everyone from appearing in raunchy People Magazine exclusives and docu-dramas.

Gilles' setting of the requiem mass then, largely conveys a sense of attractive nobility. Joel Cohen is, as ever, more dramatic than most when approaching the music. He presents the mass along with the surrounding Gregorian chant, which lends an austerity to the bubbly Baroque proceedings. Purists might cavil at Mr. Cohen's usual eccentricities: the way, for instance, that he syncopates the Dies irae chant so you can rhumba to it, or the drummed funeral march he adds which, if your headphones are set up right, starts somewhere down the hall and ends somewhere up your nose.

Though there are a few passages where the momentum flags, the Camerata takes a work which is essentially just handsome and polite and really makes a substantial case for it. I've never heard the final choral Requiem aeternam sung with such intensity. The disc was in fact recorded in Aix en Provence, where Gilles got his musical start.

If you're looking for a good introduction to the Boston Camerata, I would probably concentrate on any of Mr. Cohen's other lively Erato and Elektra/Nonesuch recordings of medieval music. I would recommend this performance, however, to anyone specifically interested in Baroque music, or in a very noble and stylized attitude towards death, or anyone who has an old dead Bourbon monarch in the pantry they've been meaning to bury in style. ❑

Correction: In our previous issue, we highly recommended a Delos recording of works by Walter Piston (Delos 3106), but expressed concern as to whether Delos was still in business. We have since been assured that Delos is indeed in business and is currently distributing to this area. We apologize for any confusion this might have caused.

About Last Night. . .

Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

Havin' a Few Whiskey's

The Place to Go When You Know Where You Want to Be

I must admit, I never used to go to Hunter's. At, least, not if I could possibly help it. Now, I know I'll get some flack for this, but it just really wasn't my kind of crowd; there always seemed to be too many aimless, trying-really-hard-to-be-somebody types, or a bunch of guys who hadn't been able to get into either Dad's or the Pour House, both just a few doors down Boylston Street. In other words, Hunter's always seemed like a second-run, second choice kind of place to me.

All that has changed now, though. Since re-opening a few months ago in its present incarnation as Whiskey's, this bar has done a face-lift on more than its decor. Sure, there are still a few of the left-over regulars muttering into their beers about how they almost ran for state Senate back in the 70's. But the bulk of the crowd is made up of post-college tuppies (Twenty-ish Upwardly Partying People) who look like they could have played the extras in St. Elmo's Fire. The atmosphere is kind of like a college party, except everybody has already been out of college for a couple of years. They all still know each other, though, and Whiskey's is their post-college hangout, sort of a surrogate for the B.U. Pub.

IF YOU GO

Whiskey's
855 Boylston Street
Boston
262-5551

The new decor at Whiskey's is much brighter than the dimly-lit, beery ambience of the old Hunter's. There's more room to move and schmooze, and it was while moving and schmoozing that I, of course, ran into some people from my misadventurous Figawi week-end down on Nantucket. Boston is just too small a town to run and hide in, and before I could duck my head in shame, they had spotted me. So I had to go over and confess that No, Figawi was not an isolated incident, and Yes, I do drink as much up here as I did down there, and No, I did not steal anyone's underwear! Nothing like being blamed for something which you are not sober enough to defend yourself against.

When I finally escaped, we decided to go check out Whiskey's outdoor patio area on the sidewalk on Boylston Street. It was expecially nice out there because the weather was perfect, and we got front row seats to the exciting parade of all the hustling homeless people who work this section of town. Their game plan is pretty clear: the drunks who spill out of the bars along this stretch will be easy targets. Since most of them don't know how much money they've spent anyway, what's another buck or two? And, as far as game plans go, this one seemed to work pretty well. The other exciting part was getting to watch the cross traffic of people heading from the Cactus Club to Dad's, and then having to walk all the way back to the Cactus Club again, shuffling defeatedly after having been told that they were simply too old to be let in to the "diner full o' teenagers."

We, meanwhile, sat back all nice and comfy, sipping our cool drinks and laughing to ourselves, because we knew who we were, and we knew where we wanted to be, and by golly, that's where we were.❑

Bar & Club Listings

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

General

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Bull & Finch Pub (Cheers)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

Frogg Lane Bar & Grill
720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston, B-7
At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowds of Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

The Littlest Bar
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

Market Place Cafe
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m.. "Street Magic" A cappella every Wednesday at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

Province Street Pub
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

Pop/Jazz/ Blues/Reggae

Cantab Lounge
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

Paradise Rock Club
254-2052, 967 Comm. Ave., Bos, C-3. One of Boston's best live clubs. Inside, you'll find one of the last of the small stages which still attracts national and international acts. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Dress is casual. Dancing on non-band nights. For show tickets, call Ticketmaster at 931-2000. Minimum age varies by show.

Rathskeller
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos, C-5. Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs and R.E.M. The Rat attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

Ryle's Jazz Club
876-9330, 212 Hampshire St., Camb, B-5. If you're a Jazz fan, don't miss Ryle's. Downstairs you'll find an older crowd listening to traditional Jazz music. Upstairs is funkier with talented fusion musicians. Feel free to move between floors. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress.

Western Front
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

Dancing

Avalon
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, D-5. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

Avenue C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, C-6. A chichi dance dub located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

Piano Rooms

Monday's Piano Bar
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline, D-3. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

Breweries

Commonwealth Brewing Company
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

Irish

Black Rose
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

The Harp at The Garden
85 Causeway St., Boston, 742-1010
Party and Dance at Boston's Newest Hotspot! The Harp pleases all music lovers' tastes with rock, reggae, jazz, progressive, and, of course, Irish. We have entertainment Wed-Sun. After-work parties on Thurs. and Fri. with live entertainment and free appetizers. Featuring some of Boston's Biggest and Best Bands! Come see Boston's newest sensation—Tim Crandall "the one man band" playing Wed 7:30-10:30 and Friday Happy Hour 5-8. Food served until midnight. Pulling Boston's Best Guinness and offering weekly drink specials! Casual dress. Cover varies. North Station stop on the Green line.

Kinvara Pub
34 Harvard Ave., Allston, 783-9400, C-2
If you are looking for a happening place with an Irish pub flavor, the Kinvara Pub is thee place to be. The pub features some of Boston's hottest acts, where dancing is the norm. Live bands Wed.-Sun. Sun night DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served until midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled and draft beer, but the Guinness shouldn't be missed. Open 7 days a week until 2 AM and ample parking in rear. Casual dress.

O'Leary's
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

Boston's Best Buys

From Sequins to Psychadelic to Cd's: Delights for Any Thrifty Boston Shopper

Toonville
This small store is packed with records, c.d.'s and tapes, many of them out of date, that you can pick up for a "song"! This is a special place for the collector if you are seeking out-of-date labels. They have a very sizable collection of old 78's and 45's. Not only do they sell old records, but they'll buy them too. Be sure if you're in that market that the records are in perfect condition and in original album covers if they're 78's. They buy back c.d.'s from $2 to $5, and tapes from 50 cents to $2. This store has a special for the summer on opera with bargains at 40% off. Pick up Carmen or Pirates of Penzance, at $5.99, and boxed sets like Fidelia at $11.99. Excellent selection of the classics and symphonies too. Boxed sets of Beethoven are $11.99. Check out the case of used c.d.'s, all in perfect condition and all current, now $9.99. Selections run from the classic, jazz, blues and reggae to fifties rock 'n roll, pop, rap and new age. All their merchandise is guaranteed. There is not a musical trend you won't find here, including famous vocalists and Broadway musicals. Check out the bargain bin for a dollar (we spotted Bon Jovi in this one!). Normal record prices for a single LP. are between $3 and $6. You can also pick up music and movie videos currently on sale.

Green Piece
A twist on recycling, this store will give you 20% off a minimum purchase of $11 if you return their plastic shopping bag. Owner Kathleen White describes the stores concept best as "experienced clothing!" Items here are great fun, from antique to funky. Feather boas, old hat boxes, platform shoes, bell bottom jeans and corduroys abound. Used Levi's are $15. On special currently are Indian wrap skirts for $4 or 3 for $10. One rack has a serious collection of leather jackets priced 50% off already marked prices of $10 to $25. The styles range from plain to bomber, 60's Dillon to 70's boxy style. The sunglasses are super...Lennon's are $6, cat eyes with rhinestones are $7 and Jackie-O's are $8. Check out the $5 sale rack of 60's dresses with their weird colors and patterns and styles. This is a great place to keep in mind for costume parties, Halloween, etc. The staff is very helpful in "pulling it all together" for you. There are racks of velvet and brocade vests and waistcoats starting at $5. Plenty of grunge, hippy items and granny sweaters with sequins; neat short black velvet jackets, huge sweeping raincoats, and, if you're really in for a change, pick up some off-beat hair dye to go with your new fashion statement!!

Oona's
1210 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
1110 Boylston St., Boston

Comin' Round Again
If you love designer labels and expensive clothes, but your pocketbook is on a diet, this is a real find. Owners, Barbara Rome and Kathy Desilets believe that resale clothes can be fabulous, well-priced and command personal attention. Not only will they accessorize you when you come into the store, but if you are a shopper who particularly likes Chanel suites or Escada, or gowns by Valentino or Bob Mackie, you'll get a call when an outfit arrives that is your favorite label and size. July is their 25% off sale. Pieces we discovered were a stunning white wool 3-piece Adolfo suit with a black windowpane pattern, originally $3500, size 10 -1 2 marked to $690 now less 25%. An entire section of Issey Miyake, Yamamoto and Comme de Garcon is marked 25% off. Also 25% off the marked price are a George Simonton silk faille theatre suit, size 4 , ($210), and a size 8 Yves St. Laurent 2 pc. silk in black and white Dalmatian print($310). Evening wear is plentiful. Check out a strapless short Norma Walters, size 10, with black jets and rhinestones, was $190, now $142.50, and a fabulous floor length Halston off-the-shoulder in burnt amber silk gazar, size 6, $157.50. Many sweaters currently priced at $40-$150 are now 25% off. Bags (Fendi and Sharif), scarves, belts, and shawls are all on summer special. Clothes brought in for consignment must be dry-cleaned with cleaning tag attached, on a hanger and not more than three years old. The better the tag, the better the price. Shop splits the sale 50-50.

To Impersonal writers:
Could your write-ins be MORE boring? Je ne croix pas. The other night I had insomnia, until I picked up the Impersonals section. Those of you who have been writing in lately: save those last few brain cells for your necessary bodily functions. Those of you who are thinking about writing in, please don't waste your semi-precious time if your IQ is not above 30 AT THE VERY LEAST. And Rosemarie, if you could spell, you might not have to worry about Vinnie running off with "chopped liver." After all, he has "prime rip" at home (I edited that one out). Another announcement from the inside: from now on, anyone named "Pam" is going to be called "Spam" in the Impersonals section, so unless you're a pork product, don't bother writing in.

Marcey and Mike:
Talk about a match made in heaven. You guys are worse than Howie and Stevie.
Robyn

Little One:
How's that chinchilla? He's been pretty talkative lately – shut him up! How can I enjoy our time together with him squeaking and starting trouble? Hey, I seen (BZZZZ! AAAAAghghghghi) uh, I mean, I SAW Mayor Flynn the other day, and he said he'd give you a call in your conference room later this week.
P.S. The 4th of July weekend is OVER! I don't know how it went yet, but I still love ya and wanna be your honey, bunny. Needle needle nit nit!
Precious

Julie,
I know your name and where you work, but hopefully you'll track me down.
Fond admirer

Julie:
How lovely it was to hear from you after so long. Your phone call informing me that you're moving in with someone else was a humiliating kick in the crotch, but at least it was unexpected. Now I have just one question: as you gave that ragged, rusty knife one last twist, did you enjoy the feel of blood pouring over your hand? Did you wash it off immediately or did you revel in its warm, silky smoothness as it dripped down your forearm? Out, damned spot!
P.S. Have I ever told you that you have the smallest breasts in the known universe?
Jon

ACE:
We're just two lost souls swimming in a fishbowl year after year. Running over the same old ground, have we found the same old fears. How I wish you were here. . .
LA-Lil

Don:
Hey you Georgia redneck! Sorry I didn't make it down there last week, but my overalls were in the wash, and if I stepped off a Yankee plane in Atlanta without the "proper attire" y'all would probably hang me from the nearest peach tree. I would have called, but I wasn't sure if you'd installed telephones down there yet. I heard you did get running water, though – congrats! Hey, I'm just kidding! I love you and miss you guys and can't wait to see you soon. Hi to Mark and Daniel! Take care.
P.S. How's Clayton State? Rigorous, huh? Don't forget those welding skills you learned a while back – you might need 'em someday!!
Love, the Yankee Rebel

Mr. DV Guy
Congratulations on your recent success. Those will get what they deserve in more ways than one.
Horace & Verdillia

To my horrible neighbor,
I have just a few things to say to you. You steal my newspaper everyday, you leer from your kitchen window with the lights off, we can see you creeping around in there, and you let your smelly dog out in our yard whenever the mangy animal needs to go. If you think that we are staring adoringly in your direction when we sit on the porch, you're so wrong it makes me dizzy. If we could make our house face the other way, we would. I can't wait until your lease runs out. - Your angry neighbor is sick of you.

To everyone who helped me out after the fire:
Thank you so much. Everyone was truly amazing (excluding the obvious). Just think – not only do I have a story, but if this had not happened, I never would have received a fire extinguisher for my birthday!
-G

Dear Thief,
This is for the loser who was pilfering items from a local eating establishment. You may find yourself with a few extra dollars for now. But when the angry staff discovers your identity you will more than likely be beaten senseless.
Sincerely,
C.O.T.W.

Dear Evil:
Thank you for the pokes and prods, the door knobs and drive-ins, the cha-chas and cosmonauts. I feel super-magnetically drawn to every bone, pore, muscle and organ that connects you and fills me up.

Joby,
I cannot believe that I caught you reading this again. It must really suck to get bagged twice. By the way, she is HOT!!, but I still haven't seen the commercial yet.
Mike

JS:
I have planned a yard sale at your Nantucket residence. I made sure to mention that you'll take any interested buyers out for a test sail- especially those Hampton Beach Figawi weekenders or anyone from the Michigan. Actually, the whole point is to fix you up with some facinating people. I'm such a good friend that I ordered a slew of pastel button- downs for you from Penny's. I think that it will beef up your image. Thank you so much for the C&B jug...I got your Mom some multi-color Bertucci's placemats to show my appeciation. She's a classy gal huh? Classy parents for a classy guy!
Love Ya!-El

Chainsaw head:
Please confine your powertool-welding, stogie-smoking antics to before 3 a.m.
Your Loving Neighbor

Sandy Dog: Sometimes you really get my goat going.
Love From Minja

SQ'ers, Storytellers, Vampires and other Assorted Strange Folk:
From now on your messages will be encoded and subliminal. You'll just have to look harder for them. Real hard. Be seeing you.

If there is a God, I hope that when you (and the rest of the vultures) die off there will be nobody around lacking enough self-respect to replace you. I'd like to say more, but I believe that what comes around goes around. I also hope that I'm there to see it. By the way, do you have to pay your friends not to avoid you?

JULY 7- JULY 20, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

Astrological overload. Some weeks there's nothing doing; some have one major, maybe two minor aspects influencing behavior; and then there's this astonishing lineup: the Cancer sun opposes deceptive Neptune on Sunday and explosive Uranus on Monday, conjuncts retrograde Mercury and trines cathartic Pluto on Thursday. In between confused and shocked reactions to the events happening out there, peaceable Venus trines Jupiter, the great benefactor. This rewarding combo means money well-spent in the pursuit of wisdom, pleasure, love and even bigger bucks. How will we notice the good stuff in the midst of discord and dismay? No doubt Mercury will whisper that enough is enough, the outside world has fucked with our inner peace and it's time to heal wounds. That's when the regenerative power of Pluto kicks in. So whether we uncover a deep, dark secret or a secret stash, give or receive spiritual sustenance, everybody is involved in this benchmark of a week. As the sun triggers the forces of change, freedom, faith and fantasy, shit happens. Remember, 1993 is the Year of the Triple Conjunctions; live dangerously. A chance to start something somewhat new (Mercury is retrograde until the 25th) comes with the new moon, exact Monday morning at 1:24 a.m. in late Cancer. Because Mercury opposes Neptune and Uranus later in the day, the news of the world will be weirder than ever.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Home base is where the action is, although your spot could be in question. Are you moving? Getting a second or third mortgage? Funds to improve your property (and psyche) are there, so is money for shrinkage and rehab. Abuse, of sorts, from the paternalistic powers that be, also a shift in your career path. The latter comes as a logical consequence of New Year's resolutions (try to remember) and the challenges you unwittingly met at your birthday. Success with clever co-workers and legal aides, ideas sell.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Amazing how well you're functioning, how you're landing on your feet during this topsy-turvy year. Just like Saddam Hussein, Taureans manage to come through shit smelling like a rose and very much in control of the garden. Earth and earthsigns, even the disruptive planets in Capricorn, have been good to you this year, no? The peaceful, prosperous trine between your Venus ruler and philosophic, philanthropic Jupiter is even better. Lotto? I would bet conservatively (an acre or two of) the farm.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

The Cancer sun in your money house calls for a show of hands to reveal where the power lies, why it's been flickering on and off since January, and when you're going to get some more. One of the joys of a retrograde Mercury is the disinterestedness (or desperation) to recall promises made but since forgotten in the flow of events. Right now your Mercury ruler insists you say/do something before history repeats itself. No fear, Venus in your sign makes you so attractive no one can spurn your request or obvious charms.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

More birthday madness, a series of one-on-one meetings with partners you feel two ways about. Don't blame yourself when the problem this week is the on-again, off-again nature of the planets in your marriage house. Perhaps you'll call the whole thing off, perhaps you'll reach another compromise. Neptune and Uranus are changing the nature of government and its seats of power so imagine what they're doing to your dominion. Happily, passionate Pluto offers a satisfying way out: ye old in-and-out.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

A really big week as your sun ruler brings to light problems with your craft, health or the services you render – another variation of a story that's been going on all year. If it isn't resolved now, there'll be another bank of choices to make in January. Much of your personal power is hidden in the solar oppositions, but come your birthday, you'll step out of the shadow and, in September, profit financially from the confusion and changes you face now. Clear the closet, look at your history again, patch holes in your ego.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Good friends and lovers or a casual acquaintance and casual sex, social responsibility and/or fun for the hell of it? Conflicts and compromises for the next two weeks, at least one too many for your discriminating mind, but none of your choices (should you actually make one) hurt anybody, least of all you. Instead you manage to work out a thorny creative matter, speak your piece to a neighbor or sibling and still have a terrific time with a good-looking, well-read androgynous creature. Plus money is plentiful.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23- OCTOBER 22)

Like Aries, you're on a seasonal see-saw, getting high on career changes and a growing reputation, coming down when confronting an erratic situation at home, within the family. There's not much you can do about the polarity right now, but instead of doubt and dysfunction, look on the bright side. While your Venus ruler trines (rewards, affirms, supports) lucky Jupiter in Libra, you'll be justifiably pleased with yourself and your new, improved philosophy of life. Fun and games and plenty of funds.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Buzz, buzz, what's the story? Mercury and the sun trine your Pluto co-ruler this week, so obviously something about you is being said, written or implied. What secretive Scorpionic stuff will be revealed? No matter, because the trine aspect is so favorable, what you/they say, write, etc. will be favorably received as well. Foreign correspondents, libraries and long distance phone calls figure prominently. A good-looking companion or two (Venus is in Gemini) have measurably more good luck when you're around.

SAGITARIUS (NOVEMBER 22- DECEMBER 21)

The money game continues – fluctuating values, veiled promises, unexpected expenditures – but whether you chalk it up as a win or a loss won't be decided this week. More information is due, although where it is supposed to come from can be a retrograde Mercury mystery. Instead, give yourself over to the joyous trine between loving Venus and your Jupiter ruler. Max out on a beautiful opportunity and rewards material and ethereal, because they'll do wonderful things for your career and reputation. Fun pays?

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

Don't let your memory fail you just because Mercury is retrograde. What you thought you heard at the last new moon (Father's Day weekend) comes up again only now, as the Cancer sun meets Mercury in your marriage house, you may feel that you have to act on the info. But this isn't the whole story or the end of the matter either – Mercury still has to turn direct and bring this stage of your partnership to a conclusion in early August. Remember, don't sign anything until then. And lighten up.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Everybody wants something from you this week – your novel view of a situation, a friendly ear at work or simply a strong physical presence by their side. Aquarians know instinctively when and how much to give without being intrusive. January birthdates particularly get an added bonanza, along with a heartfelt thank you, from fellow air signs Geminis and Librans with the grace, taste and bucks to show you a good time. Their optimism is infectious, so you'll feel like floating on cloud 9 with them.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

What's currently on the fire has to be tended until it's done: no distractions, no drifting off to play with the kids if a project needs your attention or artistic touch. Not much about this fortnight is clear cut; the verbal blunders of a retrograde Mercury, the sun's opposition to your impressionable Neptune ruler can keep you on edge, looking for another avenue, another outlet for your spirituality. Gospel? Water ballet? It's a good time to dip into your reservoir of creative ideas and replenish your soul.

Get Out Your Punsils

One of the places that makes Harvard Square an oasis from the malls is Calliope, the 21-year old toy-and-some-clothes store. What you'll find here is an obvious difference, evidenced by greater softness, refinement, and classiness in the stuffed animals, which are definitely not the mass-marketed bedtime advertisements for some movie. Perhaps not surprisingly, more adult Harvard Square habituées than their child counterparts know this store for its marvelously-wrought window displays based on puns and making use of the animals within. Excited "Eureka!"'s coupled with the obligatory groans which are really a pun's trademark form of applause are what one emits when seeing the worried-looking sheep in the window reading the Wool Street Journal. The recurring Christmas display of humanized green-felt vegetables wished us "Peas On Earth," while for summer, lambs in chefs' hats grill at a "Baa B. Q." Overly glitzed-up soft-sculpture dolls exuding from red valentine candy boxes bear the labels "Sweet Tarts," and ducks at an ice cream fountain were "Soda Quakers." Calliope's annual contest, searching for window concepts (Punny Bones) is now in swing, but only till July 24. Last year, one winner was a 9 year old girl whose rockstar frog sang "Unforgettable." And campaigning dalmations in patriotic bowlers had a sign reading "See Spot Run." Gratifyingly enough, all winners' entries are displayed in their PunStars window, and the actual winners get their concepts thoroughly produced.

In the Irony Farm

It helps that the events in Girl, Interrupted happened two decades ago and that the voice of the now-narrating woman telling, rather loosely, of her twenty months at McLean Hospital, is so mordantly possessed of itself. On shockingly short notice, Susanna Kaysen is whisked off by taxi, at the behest of a first-time-seen psychiatrist, to the hospital. Was her suicide attempt truly serious, or was Kaysen just twisting with an exacerbated version of adolescent angst, pimples, perhaps promiscuity ("I had a barrelful of boyfriends"), and a kind of aimlessness that was not uncommon in the 60s? Interwoven with her literary accountings of the undeniably crazy patients she lived amongst, and also of some undeniably flat-footed people on the staff, who at times saw things with very little resonance, are pages retrieved from the typed hospital records that proclaim her to be suffering from "Psychoneurotic depressive reaction" and "Borderline personality." Whatever she had or was, however "crazy" she was or wasn't, her view, both the outward, clinical-looking one and the reporting she does on her own sometimes fascinatingly convoluted perceptions, is dipped in some of the same dye that gives J.D. Salinger's Franny such poignant power. There's a knowing irony at work here, and Kaysen uses some of it to hint at the difficult person she could be even when love (she met her future, now-ex, husband during a furlough from McLean) was offered. The minimalist tinge to the book makes the heaviness, the sadness of the subject more tart, easier to bear.

Starving, But Chicly and Often In Black

Starving Artist, once in the basement and now on the second floor, is on a trajectory that will probably eventually land them on the street, Newbury Street that is, and at street-level. It's where off-beat, raffish, and, in some cases, newly-hatched designs from a number of young, up-and-coming, or new Boston designers are shown. One such designer, Geoffrey B. Small, is not exactly new – he's the inventor of the clean, clear white "The Ultimate Shirt" – but he's using the forum of Starving Artist to move on to wacky deconstruction stuff; one jacket looks to be in the process of being sewed in the first place, with the canny showing of the darts and artful hanging threads. Nong Tumsutipong shows provocative wool chaps that wrap around shorts revealing what might otherwise be a codpiece. Tunji Dada makes split palazzo pants and Elaine Perlov has twisted old plaid flannel to a fare-thee-well of grunge disrepair to make the equivalent of a sweater tied around the waist, only it's sort of a skirt. Several designers show trim, chic, and typically black belly-baring tops. And in another take on black, there's a tight-tight leather dress that ends in a flamenco-ish spray of red tulle, with elasticized bits of flounce for the arms. Nong also (this being a shop for daring men as well as women) designs a jacket that has bits of industrial grating on the front, as if one were looking inside a club-going robot. Very provocative, sexy, medieval-maiden-like chain mail is shown in elaborate belts and shakey vests by Andrea Masoudi. The shop, catering to "Boston's Finest Unknowns" has a sign that reads "Come In, We Love And Understand You."

WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

RECORDINGS

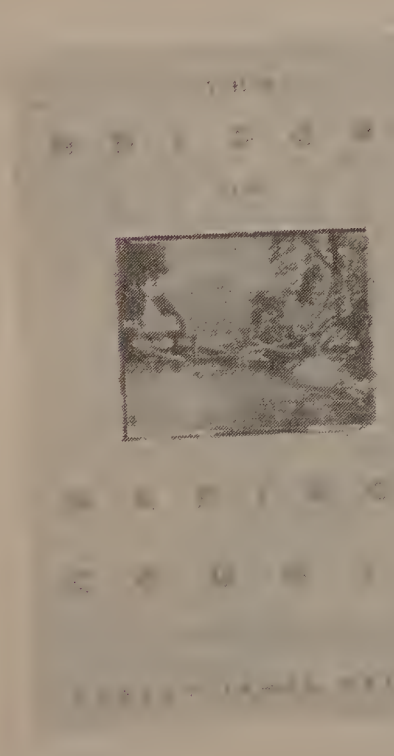
Matthew Sweet, Altered Beast. Just out in stores is Sweet's critically acclaimed follow-up to last summer's "Girlfriend," the cult hit for many twenty-somethings, and a commercial success to boot. In addition to a slightly more complex sound, the tracks on Altered Beast exhibit a somewhat more mature writing style that's sure to appeal to an even greater number of listeners.

Sweet Relief: A Tribute to Victoria Williams. Like most musicians, folk artist Victoria Williams does not have health insurance. But since being diagnosed with MS, music lovers have found that she does have many friends in the industry. Together for a smash benefit CD on her behalf are (among others) Pearl Jam, Evan Dando of the Lemonheads, Lou Reed and Soul Asylum.

OUTERWEAR

Light, comfortable, and affordable, Teva™ sandals are between every one's feet and the pavement this summer. Unlike their cumbersome leather contemporaries, Tevas strap on snug for a night around town, or a day at the beach. Good for the sole.

CONCERTS



The Kinks. Great Woods. July 27. Two of the greats from the British Invasion, the Davies brothers have put sibling differences aside for a summer tour promoting their 30th release "Phobia." The Kinks have just been added to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame as well as the Great Woods roster, so you won't find this show on any calendar. Take advantage of the minimal publicity and call Ticket Master for your tickets right away. 931-2000.

RESTAURANT

Geoffrey's Cafe. 651 Boylston, Boston. Lines have been forming every Sunday on Boylston this summer for the best brunch in town. Choose from a variety of selections from the eclectic menu, or just relax in the shade with the drink of your choice. All downtown and near the heart of it all.

VIDEO

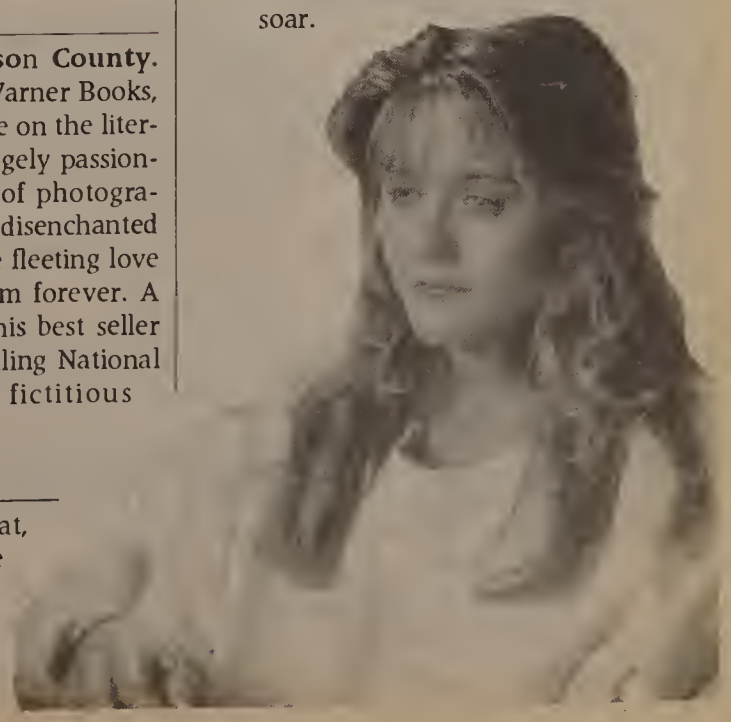
The Crying Game. The "secret" erotic plot surprise is the last of the reasons to see this social political thriller starring newcomer Jaye Davidson. Media hype aside, viewers get intelligent, breakthrough screen writing, as well as stellar performances. Just released for home video, but if it's not on the shelves, try Malcom X or Scent of a Woman.

BOOKS

The Bridges of Madison County. Robert James Waller (Warner Books, 14.95) From a new voice on the literary scene comes a strangely passionate and mystical story of photographer Robert Kincaid, a disenchanted Iowa farm wife, and the fleeting love affair that haunted them forever. A narrative so genuine, this best seller had readers actually calling National Geographic for the fictitious Kincaid's photographs.

REFRESHER

Ice Coffee. With this heat, the last thing people want is their morning pick-me-up served hot. This summer, stop by The Coffee Connection and beat the heat with a cup of Al Fresco, a coffee blend specifically created to be served over ice. And if you're looking for something on the lighter side, try the new and improved Low-Fat Frappuccino, also served ice cold and with only one gram of fat per serving.



HAPPENINGS

Muscle Cars. Don't miss the Mustangs, Corvettes and GTO's at the Museum of Transportation in Brookline on July 25th. All cars are in mint conditiuon and many have come from all over the country to show you what's under the hood. Admission is only $4 for adults and $2 for seniors and children. Call 522-6547 for more information.

MOVIES

Sleepless in Seattle Directed by Nora Ephron. Call it a yuppie romance or good old fashioned cinema, the soundtrack alone is getting thousands of movie-goers out to the box office this summer to see Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan together as Sam and Annie, the displaced couple that people love to watch find each other. Add a little tyke full of Hollywood sass to the formula and watch the ticket sales soar.

Alisson McDermott

A Trip To Absinth

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

Nestled among the many cafes and bakeries that dot the landscape of Boston's historic North End is the Gallery Absinth. It is the latest addition to the growing number of art galleries that have rooted themselves in this animated neighborhood. Absinth is tucked away on the second floor of a modest building at 215 Hanover Street. Alisson McDermott, the driving force and visionary behind this young gallery, wanted to offer the public an alternative to the quiet reserve of the Newbury Street galleries. "With its character and flavor," says the 22-year-old entrepreneur, "The North End was a natural choice."

The Gallery Absinth, like the potent liqueur it derives its name from, is an intoxicating blend of emotion and vision. It is a place where the anxieties, obsessions, and passions of local artists are awhirl.

"Artwork is like a poem," Alisson states, "It's charged with emotion... It is something that makes you feel less alone in this world." Alisson says she especially likes artwork that is politically charged. "It's important to tap into issues and get them out there for people to consider."

A student artist herself, Alisson knows what it is like to struggle with creative energy. "I want my gallery to be a hothouse for talent," she says, "I want the artists to thrive here."

In a city where there are few major forums for contemporary artists to establish themselves, Gallery Absinth hopes to fill the gap. "I want to give emerging artists an early chance to get their foot in the door," Alisson says, "I don't want them to feel that they have to go to New York."

Alisson's commitment to making the arts accessible to everyone stems from her credo that the more familiar people become with art, the less they will feel intimidated by it. "Everybody brings their own set of experiences to artwork," she says, "so you cannot misunderstand a piece of art."

As she tries to prepare for the July 22 reception for painter Matthew Lazure, Alisson focuses on her main goal. "I want my gallery to mature with the artists," she says. "They're all unknown and so am I, so we can grow together." ❑

PAUL SZEP

BY CHRISTOPHER FRANCESCANI

The Dean of Boston Cartoonists

Picture, if you will, Paul Szep's mind. Inside the ink-stained chambers of his imagination, presidents' faces melt like warm wax into birds' beaks, and mayors' chins jut from their liberally-caricatured profiles like crude outcroppings from crater-studded mountainsides. And you should see the Leona Helmsley he imagines.

Enter the world of Boston Globe cartoonist Paul Szep, two-time winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Cartoonists. His third Pulitzer was rescinded in 1978 by a Pulitzer oversight committee who felt that Szep, according to one source, had received "too many Pulitzer Prizes too fast." It would have been his third in five years.

If a picture is worth a thousand words, then a good cartoon must be worth a ten-pound Webster dictionary. Dean Wallace, publisher of Boston Comic News, calls Szep the "Dean of Boston-based cartoonists," and notes that Beantown is "uniquely blessed" with a "top-flight cartoonist" like Szep.

His frequently-syndicated cartoons, appearing three times weekly in the Globe, have elicited controversy in Boston and across the country for more than two decades. His targets have included American presidents, high-ranking clergy, and questionably upright local leaders, not to mention the often short-sighted and poorly-informed opinions of the general public. Szep even digs his spurs into the horse that he rides on, recently lashing out at the local media's orgiastic farewell coverage of former Mayor Flynn's departure to Rome.

Never one to take his subjects lightly, Szep's daily research entails reading six major newspaper, tuning in to the local talk shows, and whacking a bucket of golf balls in his front yard each morning to help him concentrate.

The sharp sting of his ink-brushed invective has not gone without reprisal. Szep has been blacklisted at four golf clubs, lambasted by angry clergymen and had toilet paper sent to him in the mail. "You see it all the time in this business," he contends.

With rolling brush strokes and short, telling scribbles, this outspoken opinionist from Brookline pokes fun at just about anything that deserves the attention of his prescient pen strokes. International conflicts and urban dramas are played out within the dimensions of his two-by-four inch box, and nothing is held too sacred to satirize. How far will he go to make a point? "I'll be as offensive as they'll let me be," he says, smiling. ❑

THE BEST & WORST OF EVERYTHING

Back when Boston's streets were filled with horse dung and cheap perfume, this city was the center of American culture. We knew what was what, and we gloated about it. We dictated taste to a growing nation.

RESTAURANT DINING

Back then, Beacon Hill battleaxes in black bombazine glared across the Common at offensive plaids. Young Puritan heirs who fumbled with a wine choice were whisked away to country seats where they wouldn't disgrace their ancient lineage. Women fainted at the sight of cheap cheese. It all seemed so simple then.

But now we often don't know what we want, still less where to get it. The price is wrong; and the goods are bad. The great little place you knew has been bulldozed to make way for CVS. There's now a range of tastes our ancestors never thought about.

New Restaurant

B David's, 123 Stuart Street, Boston. Even the tough critics like this place. Try the apple-apricot crostata. By the way, we prefer the Italian spelling.

Spicy Food

B East Coast Grill, 1271 Cambridge St., Cambridge. On Hotter Than Hell Night, it's so hot your silverware will sweat.

W Beth Israel Hospital Cafeteria, 330 Brookline Ave. If you have a choice, take the I.V.

Indian Food

B Bombay Bistro, 1353 B Beacon St., Coolidge Corner, Brookline. Voted best second year in a row, and still worthy of an award.

W Anywhere in Central Square, Cambridge. They say Ghandi began his hunger strike here.

Vegetarian

B Cecil's On South Street, 129 South St., Boston. Even though it's not strictly a vegetarian restaurant, the seventeen vegetarian dishes there are outstanding. Artists receive a 20% discount.

W Hilltop Steak House, Rte 1, Saugus. Don't let the plastic cows out front fool you. Even the vegetables moo.

Dim Sum

B China Pearl, 9 Tyler St., Chinatown. The sure sign—there's always a long line of locals.

W Any place near Berklee College. If you still think all dogs go to Heaven, think again.

Chinese

B ($$$) Mr. Leung, 545 Boylston St., Boston. The best Peking Duck in the city. But those black-tied waitstaff can intimidate a wallet.

Wine

B Michael's Waterfront, 85 Atlantic Ave., Boston. An award winning wine list that will Best Waiter: Adam Pires of Davio's

Rising Star to Watch:
Executive Chef James Rogers of Michael's Waterfront

appease all tastes and budgets, with plenty of books to thumb through.

W M.J. Lynch, Kenmore Square. Fine for cigarettes, a six-pack and Doritos, but we didn't know "Mad Dog" was considered wine.

Birthday Cake

B Steve's Ice Cream, 95 Massachusetts Ave., Boston. Wonderful ice cream birthday cakes covered in whipped cream.

Wings

B Coolidge Corner Clubhouse, 307 Harvard St. Brookline.

W Sweetwater Cafe, 3 Boylston Place, Boston. What do you expect for free?

Sushi

B Kotobukiya in the Eliot Café, 85 Massachusetts Ave., Boston. It's so fresh it's hard to believe it's dead.

W The No Name Restaurant, Boston Fish Pier. We don't think it was intentional.

Pizza

B Sicilia's Pizza, 347 Tremont St., Boston. Their Chicago style and thin crust pizzas keep on winning awards. They're undiscovered and wonderful.

W Bayside Expo Center, 200 Mount Vernon, Dorchester. Brings institutional food service to a new low. If the pizza doesn't kill you, the smell will.

Ice Cream

B Tuesday's, 30 Station St., Brookline Village. The best scoop on a summer afternoon.

Summer Dining

B Spasso, 160 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. Casual and upscale, this Italian bistro is the better part of a summer evening.

W Neptune Seafood, Northern Ave., Boston. Spectacular views of the third harbor tunnel: lots of dirt and giant holes in the ground.

Fresh Wholesale Produce

B Waltham Fruit, 52 New St., Cambridge. Go ahead, squeeze their melons.

W Haymarket. They select your fruit for you. Take what I give ya or I breaka you face.

Meat & Potatoes

B Boodles, 40 Dalton St., Boston. An Irishman's dream. Where else can you find meat and potatoes with fifty kinds of beer?

There's something familiar about an Elsie-burger gas-pain. There's something sweet to savour in the Cafe Algier's sarcastic service- the best place in the Boston area to get snubbed by a Russian would-be poet mixing frappes.

Caesar's Salad

B Papa Razzi, 271 Dartmouth St., Boston. Render unto Caesar crunchy croutons and heavy on the garlic.

W Any restaurant that can't spell Caesar.

Middle East Grocery

B Eastern Lamejun Bakers, 145 Belmont St., Belmont. Extraordinary selection of gourmet Middle Eastern foods: Houmus, Tabouleh and much more. Worth a trip to the suburbs.

W Ming's Market, 1102 Washington Street. Chinatown. So what if ginseng root doesn't go well in pita bread. Their caterpillar fungus is out of this world.

Jurassic Cuisine

B Cafe Budapest, 90 Exeter St., Boston. Their cuisine has bypassed all trends and stayed classic old world.

W Durgin-Park, Faneuil Hall, Boston. Their kitchen will drive you to extinction.

Bagel

B The Ultimate Bagel, 335 Newbury St., Boston. Bagels so good, you'll convert.

Chocolate

B Michael's Chocolate Torte, available at Fresh Louis' Farm Market, 349 Newbury St., Boston. Baked on premises. A Weight Watcher's nightmare and a chocoholic's dream.

W Chocolate Maniac Brownie at Small Planet, 566 Boylston St., Boston. Gastronomically challenging– perhaps this dessert can be used as an alternative fuel source.

Sandwiches

B Parish Café, 361 Boylston St., Boston. Impeccable selection. Chefs Jasper, Lydia, and Todd have their namesake sandwiches here.

W Charlie's Sandwich Shoppe, 429 Columbus, Boston. Most overrated in the area.

Coffee

B Coffee Connection, 360 Newbury, Boston. The best legal buzz north of Columbia. The best of the best is the new Coffee Connection on Upper Newbury.

W McDonalds. Tastes like chicken.

Romantic Restaurant

B Odyssey Cruises, Rowes Wharf, Boston. And if your date doesn't think so, they can swim home.

Italian Dinner Starters

B Massimino's, 207 Endicott Street, North End. Try the giardenera and sautéd eggplant and garlic & olive oil- it will start your evening off with a spark.

Ribs & Ribbers

B The Original Sports Saloon, Copley Square Hotel, 47 Huntington Ave, Boston. Chew 'em down to the bone.

W Laura Raposa and Gayle Fee, Boston Herald's "Inside Track". Tasteless, and besides –where's the beef?

Dinner Theatre

B Mystery Cafe Dinner Theatre, 290 Congress Street, Boston. It's always exciting to find out who did it. Or who did whom.

W Medieval Manor, 246 East Berkeley Street, Boston. We thought food fights went out with the village idiot. The Dark Ages were stupid enough the first time around.

Lunch Takeout

B Rebecca's Cafe, 21 Charles Street, Boston. Our favorites are the northern Italian lasagna and the low-fat specials–look for the carrot! Soon to be in the new Prudential.

BOSTON

So it takes more effort than ever to sort out the good from the bad, the best from the worst. But don't feel alone. We've listened to your comments, we've pooled our resources. We've test-driven fads that can only be called life threatening. We've brought together a list of the Best and Worst in Boston— from nauseous political pundits to evenings out that will change your life— a list that will seperate the chaff from the grain, the sheep from the goats.

So take our advice. We're all in this together.

W Caffe Gianni, 500 Boylston Street, Boston. You have to attend an orientation to fix your lunch.

Restaurant on the Move

B Legal Sea Foods, Boston, Peabody, Washington, the World. . . Boston's favorite fish restaurant has headed south to feed hungry pols in the nation's capital.

Chef

B Susan Regis, Biba, 272 Boylston St., Boston. Still the best- a second year in a row! We hope she stops hanging out with those porkers. Rising stars to watch for: James Rodgers, Executive Chef, Michaels Waterfront; Chef Dawn Rose and Chef Paul Boras, Olives Restaurant. Chef Charles Prentiss, Meridien Hotel.

Sushi Chefs

B Gyuhama, 827 Boylston St., Boston. Personality, show, talent. Fresh as their seafood. Sharp as their knives. Raw genius.

Outdoor Patio

B Davio's, in the Royal Sonesta Hotel, Cambridge. The vista is one of the most spectacular views of Boston.

Best Young Musician: Monster Mike.

New Drink

B Absolut Passion at the Marias, 116 Boylston St., Boston. 1oz Absolut Vodka, 1 1/2 oz passion juice, a splash of pineapple juice, champagne, and grenadine.

Guinness Draft

B Mr. Dooley's Boston Tavern, 77 Broad Street, Boston. Liquid dinner.

Club Opening

B House of Blues, Harvard Square. Jake and Elwood would like this place.

Boston's Best Buys

Here's a great opportunity to purchase restaurant supply equipment such as glasses, china and flatware for only pennies! Michael Solomo, the new owner of Silver Restaurant Supply and Equipment Company, is getting rid of all the old inventory, and he needs you to help him. Mind you, this is a warehouse sale, so wear your dungarees and shop till you drop; everything is cash and carry. The fabulous finds include plates at ten cents, glassware at twenty cents, and flatware at ten to fifteen cents a piece for stainless steel, all restaurant quality. Fraternities and college dining rooms should love discovering odd plates and other dinnerware from restaurants which may have closed ten or fifteen years ago. Everything is priced at 50-70% off suggested manufacturer's retail. Open for the first time to the general public, you'll find glassware from shot glass size to huge brandy snifters, and even real lead crystal. The china is mostly mix-and-match, but some of the antique patterns are great collectibles. Cooks will revel in the stock and lobster pots, casseroles and chef's tools. If you're operating a restaurant or catering company, pick up used refrigerators, pizza ovens, or the piece de resistance, a Vulcan stove with 6 burners, a grill, and two ovens for only $1200 (orig. $3,000). Blowout days are Thur., July 22, Fri., July 23, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Sat., July 24, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Help Mickey unload his new inventory and have a blast while doing it!

Fleas A Crowd

If you're not timid and enjoy picking through odds and ends, then Fenway Flea is the place. This nifty "flea" market has sixty people on consignment. This creates a constant turnover of merchandise from week to week, so retracing your steps can be full of surprises. Prices tend to be negotiable. You'll find old records and old paperbacks for fifty cents, along with incense, decanters, and odd lamps. If you're a hanger-on from the sixties, the lava lamp is hot here for about $50, but you can wheel and deal for up to $10 off. Other funky items include a brass bench with faux leopard fabric for $46, and a black wrought-iron plant stand (great for the patio) at $35. For the vintage collector, there are lots of hidden treasures ranging from old typewriters to Coca-Cola, Schrafft Candy, and Coppertone signs from $10-$30. For the ambitious with stuff to sell, they'll rent you a space which consists of either a shelf unit or a table for $60 a month.

Fun Furniture Finds

Whatever furniture you're searching for, you'll find it here for the right price. For example, a terrific contemporary queen sleep sofa and matching chair, coffee table, two end tables and two lamps costs just $697. For the person with a small studio or small eat-in kitchen, a nifty black faux leather table with two black lacquer and brass chairs is just $129. Bedroom sets include a queen headboard, 6-drawer bureau with a mirror, 5-drawer man's chest, plus full size mattress, box spring, and frame all for $597. Nightstands can be purchased for $119 and upgrades in mattress selections are available. Many and varied entertainment centers are a mere $197. $497 will get you an 80" leather sofa in several different styles. Individual pieces are available from the warehouse, but keep in mind a custom color order can take four weeks. A glass-top dining table and four chairs in a contemporary pattern is $497, with extra chairs running $79 each. Many other pieces are available, including a good selection of bunk beds and junior furniture for the kids.

Extremely Handy Cookbook, Chapter I

The I'm-Already-10-Minutes-Late-For-Work Breakfast Recipes

Breakfast is THE MOST IMPORTANT meal of the day, as you can tell from my strategic use of capital letters. It's so important that I always leave more than enough time in the morning to hit my "Snooze" button again and again (and again), and look at my kitchen door as I sprint past it late for work. But seriously (the last part was a joke), even though I do usually make it into my kitchen in the morning, there's never – and I wouldn't lie about this – a five-course breakfast waiting for me, let alone a breakfast that can be eaten on the T, without a bib, high enough in energy to keep me going until I can skip lunch for showing up late to work.

Fortunately, a few Boston-area nutritionists have been kind enough to provide the following breakfast suggestions because they care that much about the health of busy people and about free advertising.

But before we learn high-energy recipes, we should first learn which foods the body turns into energy, and howl I'll leave this fun-filled task to Kary Lutz, Licensed Guardian of Busy People and Nutritionist So Knowledgeable It Makes Me Dizzy. Her explanation – which was in Swahili and included a cover-to-cover reading of War and Peace – boils down to this: "Oh, you're Foot-Bone's connected to your, Shin-Bo—"

Wait! I remember now: The "How Your Body Converts Food Into Energy" song is actually in the key of F and goes like this: "Oh, you eat Mr. Carbohydrate who metabolizes into pancreatic insulin glucose-oriented antidisestablishmentarianism let alone supercallafragilistickexpialido-hold note-shus. It's that simple. It has to be, for Schoolhouse Rock to continue being so popular with every adult who's had more than two beers.

Now we're ready for the first recipes which – brace yourself – require a little preparation the night before. Breakfast #1 is from nutritionist Corinne Adler, and is called Granola Schpoink for the sole reason that I don't often have the opportunity to work the word "Schpoink" into an article.

Here's your grocery list:

1 Cup each of buckwheat groats, rolled oats, wheat flakes, chopped almonds, and chopped apricots.

1/2 Cup each of corn oil, sesame seeds, hulled sunflower seeds, and wheat germ.

1 Person who knows what the hell "buckwheat groats" are.

Preheat oven to 300 degrees, and remember: Stir every mixture in this recipe constantly – if not more often – so I don't have to keep repeating the word "stir." (I'm tired.) Toast buckwheat groats for 10 minutes, and then add the oats, wheat flakes, and oil and toast for an additional 15 minutes. Add all seed-and-nut-like objects and toast for another 10 minutes. Finally, add the wheat germ and apricots.

Corinne assures me that if you mix Granola Schpoink with yogurt or milk, it not only tastes delectable but also provides you with everything, including complex-carbos, protein, fiber, beta-carotene, and three players to be named later.

Breakfast #2 comes from nutritionist Kary Lutz, and looks an awful lot like leftovers - two slices of pizza and a piece of fruit or a "juice box." - but don't be deceived: carbos from the juice and crust, and protein from the cheese make these high-energy leftovers.

The following breakfasts don't require any preparation; they can be made, consumed, digested and power-vomited in well under a minute.

1. Breakfast bars are so numerous and diverse that they require their own article, if not their own mini-series. The most popular ones are: FinHalsa (Swedish for "expensive gerbil food"), Dietfuel (low-fat gerbil food), and Power Bars (gerbil food with a faint faint FAINT taste of honey).

2. Toast 'N Jammers (similar to "Pop-Tarts," only low in fat) and Eight ounces of skim milk (similar to six ounces of skim milk, only more). You get your complex-carbos from the whole wheat flour, carbos from the fruit, and protein from the milk.

3. Carnation sells instant everything. They make breakfast bars, as well as instant breakfast powders that you mix with milk, and drink in flavors like chocolate, coffee and strawberry. And don't ask me how-what-why but all of the flavors actually taste good, and I'm not even being poked with hot irons to say that.

STOP THE PRESSES!

(Isn't this exciting?) There has just been a major scientific breakthrough in the world of instant breakfast drinks: Carnation has invented an instant breakfast drink that comes pre-mixed with low-fat milk! Now, instead of wasting a full 15 or 20 seconds stirring milk ("Ven I vas a kid vee had to ster our own melk.") you can put that time to far more important things, like writing your own "How Your Body Converts Food Into Energy" song for Schoolhouse Rock and the HUGE cash-prize being offered by The Improper, unless my editor sees this sentence before it goes to print. ❑

Hotshot Harvard Law School grad Mitch McDeere (Tom Cruise) finds he's made a deal with the devil and to extricate himself must go up against his new law firm, the Mafia, and the FBI. Director Sydney Pollack establishes character and motive with decisive sledgehammer blows, but there's little buildup and suspense. The movie aspires to literary heights but only succeeds at seeming pretentious. What lively moments it has are thanks to a motley assortment of quirky low-lives: Gary Busey as a good-natured private eye, Holly Hunter as a good-hearted tootsie; David Strathairn as Mitch's droll jailbird brother Ray, and Ed Harris as a bullying, hot-headed FBI agent.

When her father dies in a freak accident, a young girl, Sally (Asha Menina), withdraws into her own autistic world. She builds a huge house of cards with a winding stairway in the hopes of reaching the moon where she believes her father lives. Sally's mother, an architect, (Kathleen Turner) tries to get inside her daughter's mind by building another "stairway to the moon" in the backyard. Meanwhile, the Department of Child Welfare wants to take Sally away. Several subplots such as the romance between Ruth and a child psychologist (Tommy Lee Jones) are never fully developed. The many loose ends include unexplained supernatural forces.

M.R.D'ENTREMONT

Summer movies should be no-brainer fun and this one is. Using a "magic" ticket, Danny (Austin O'Brien) is transported into the movie world of his screen idol, Jack Slater (Arnold Schwarzenegger). The two romp back and forth between Jack's world of make-believe (where getaway cars fly through the air and even the women behind the video store counters look like Hollywood starlets) and Danny's "reality" where the bad guys sometimes win. Those in the audience who insist on remaining adults can amuse themselves by identifying the many stars who appear in cameo roles and the various movie genre site gags and references.

T.MILLER

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts — and there are many — don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. The only entertaining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs running amuck in Jurassic Park and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill, and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

K.WILSON

The opening of director Kenneth Branagh's latest film is full of fun and promise as both men and women prepare themselves for the battle of the sexes. Beatrice (Emma Thompson) and Benedict (Kenneth Branagh) are worthy adversaries, precursors to all the smart, snappy, sexy, big screen couples we love. Hero (Kate Beckinsale) and Claudio (Robert Sean Leonard) are beautiful young lovers. When the vindictive Don John (Keanu Reeves) tricks Claudio into believing his love is a wanton hussy, the battle turns ugly. Finally, all's well that ends well. The movie slows down as the director relies more and more on close-ups to tell the story.

K.WILSON

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

Rookie of the Year is a kids' movie that's not just for kids. It's the fast-paced, funny story of 12-year-old Henry Rowengartner (Thomas Ian Nicholas), who finds he can throw baseballs at 100 m.p.h. after his broken arm heals abnormally. He becomes a big hit when his mother's mercenary boyfriend signs him as pitcher with the Chicago Cubs. The film neatly combines childhood fantasy with adult reality. In his baseball dream world Henry contends with immense pressure to perform and jealous team members, such as over-the hill pitcher Chet Steadman (Gary Busey). Still, Henry has a ball, and so do we — even those of us who aren't avid baseball fans.

No trouble sleeping here. A young boy from Seattle, Jonah Baldwin (Ross Malinger), phones a radio talk show and says his widowed dad needs a new wife. A woman in Baltimore, Annie Reed (Meg Ryan), becomes obsessed with the young caller and his father Sam (Tom Hanks) and realizes that she and her fiancè are mismatched. The premise is clever but the plot is rehashed. We get two hours of amusing, but all-too-familiar, "Will they (meet) or won't they?" Annie loses interest in her fiancè because there are no surprises in their relationship. Ditto our reaction to this movie. Still, Hanks and Ryan are great. Maybe next time they could do two scenes together.

Liv Ullman, star of many Ingmar Bergman films, makes a sterling career switch to screenwriter-director with this rich, passionate, philosophical tale of a young Jewish woman (Karen-Lise Mynster), growing up in Copenhagen at the end of the nineteenth century. Sofie must make a momentous decision: run away with the love of her life, a Christian painter with a burning soul, or please her parents by marrying an Orthodox Jew whom she doesn't love. Ullman lets her tale unfold in a deliberately leisurely, contemplative manner and its power — through several decades of bar mitzvahs, kosher meals, births and deaths — grows and grows until the immensely moving climax.

G. PEARY

WEEKEND AT BERNIE'S II

If you thought Weekend at Bernie's was funny, and think the sequel might be even funnier, think again. There are exactly three laughs in this otherwise vacuous "comedy." To get rich quick, boys Andrew McCarthy and Jonathan Silverman steal Bernie's corpse (Terry Kiser) from the morgue and bring it to the Virgin Islands in order to retrieve his safe deposit box full of cash. Everyone wants a piece: crooks, a shifty business mogul and even a voodoo priestess (who gives Bernie a little animation). The film moves too fast and little is substantiated. The characters are dull and idiotic. The most intelligent is Bernie —at least he knows when to sit still and shut up. M.R.D'ENTREMONT

Movie Review / Kaj Wilson

IN THE LINE OF FIRE

Macho Nuevo Is Still Macho

The opening scene of In the Line of Fire is pure Dirty Harry. But director Wolfgang Peterson and star Clint Eastwood want to confound our expectations that the make-my-day, nerves-of-steel Harry is back. It's the 90s after all, and movie action heroes have changed. Now they are tough but remorseful, they feel pain, physical and emotional, but then get on with it; they know that death and dying is a grim business, although that doesn't stop them from blowing the other guy away and living to regret it. Call it Macho Nuevo.

PROTECTING THE PREZ: Secret Service agents Lilly Raines (Rene Russo) and Frank Horrigan (Clint Eastwood) run alongside the motorcade in "In the Line of Fire"

In the Line of Fire is an exciting, coherent, intelligent, often humorous action thriller. Eastwood plays Frank Horrigan, a Secret Service Agent who was assigned to protect JFK on November 22, 1963. Thirty years later he's still an agent, a "borderline burnout with questionable social skills," who has lost his family and is consumed by guilt and shame that it wasn't he who died that day in Dallas.

On a routine assignment Frank stumbles on a plot to kill the current President. Would-be assassin Mitch Leary (John Malkovich) is a sociopath as obsessed with tormenting Frank as he is with killing the President, and he catches Frank up in a game of cat-and-mouse in which the roles keep shifting. Leary is Frank's flip side. Frank is laconic, controlled; Leary, talkative, impetuous. Frank's a protector; Leary, a predator. After a while we get used to Leary with his soft, flat voice, even a little bored with him and his incessant theorizing. He becomes quite attached to Frank, and there are hints of homoeroticism that culminate in Leary drawing his lips over Frank's drawn gun. When Frank and Leary confront each other for the last time, they bicker. Frank, ever the alpha male, snarls at Leary, "You have a rendezvous with my ass, motherfucker."

Because the President is at best a nonentity, at worst, a hack, we don't really care whether he lives or dies. We ultimately come to identify with the assassin. We want Leary to get through the checkpoint, to find the bullet that he drops because we don't want to be deprived of the excitement of the assassination attempt and the inevitable showdown. Frank doesn't really care about the President either. He wants redemption, to prove to himself that he "has the guts to take that fatal bullet." Frank and Leary are alienated from the system that created them. They don't believe in anything within or outside themselves.

Frank is old, almost a relic, and his reputation is shaky. He can't run very far without huffing and puffing, and he gets no respect from the young turks in the Agency. He doesn't want to die. He may even cry (we can't tell for sure). But make no mistake, In the Line of Fire is still Hollywood and has its share of suspense, screaming, crashing glass and shoot outs. In true Hollywood fashion, the hero gets his second chance.

Secret Service Agent Lilly Raines (well played by Rene Russo) is the Designated Female. She's a strong character who is drawn to Frank in spite of his chauvinist tendencies. Perhaps she believes that Frank is really sensitive because he loves jazz and plays the piano in dark smoky bars. But experience tells us that a man makes ignorant remarks because he's ignorant, even if he gives us a cute cock-eyed grin as if to say, "Hey, I'm just yanking your chain." And nothing will convince us that Frank has any interest in being the one to keep the home fires burning. That's just Hollywood window dressing. Macho Nuevo is still macho. ❑

ORLANDO

"Damned if I have any idea of what Orlando learns from it all..."

Innovative gender-bender it might be, but the novel version of Orlando greatly disappointed legions of Virginia Woolf fans when it appeared in 1928. The time-traveling adventures of Orlando the man, who awakens transformed into Orlando the woman, seemed too playful, precious, and inconsequential for the intense admirers of Woolf's forays into the subconscious and unconscious in Jacob's Room and the magnificent To the Lighthouse.

Playful it definitely is. Still, Woolf's Orlando is more engaging than its original readers would concede. At least the first half of the book, a fake history of jolly, post-Elizabethan England that begins in the gloomy 19th century with England frozen rock-solid into a veritable Ice Age, and a mysterious black cloud covering all Britain, is as wild and woolly as a Paul Bunyan tall tale. Orlando floats through it all: as an awkward young poet, as a favorite at Queen Elizabeth's court, as England's ambassador to Constantinople. Orlando's adventures commence with him as a male, then continue as a female.

ORLANDO: Tilde Swinton as the gender-switching, time-traveling Orlando

Woolf is particularly eloquent observing Orlando observing how differently he/she is treated having achieved "the penalties and privileges" of womanhood. Woolf says, "She was becoming a little more modest, as women are, of her brains, and a little more vain, as women are, of her person...the change of clothes had, some philosophers would say, much to do with it...they change our view of the world and the world's view of us."

Actress Tilda Swinton, though a limited talent, certainly has the look for the lead role in the movie version of Orlando. Tall, lithe, long-legged, comfortably androgynous, Swinton makes an appropriate male Orlando, a young man on the move in Elizabethan leggings, then an excruciatingly confined female Orlando, trying to maneuver past 18th century furniture in a massive hoop skirt. Finally, Swinton is a modern-day Orlando, an AC/DC dressed-for-success author plowing around 1990's London in a motorcar.

Sound good? Orlando the movie already has heaps of devotees, who, curiously, find Consequence and Importance just at the places where Woolf's readers found all style and no content. Well, I don't know what these film fans are so excited about. For the most part, Orlando the movie is EMPTY. Director Sally Potter takes her protagonist through 400 years of time, but damned if I have any idea what Orlando learns from it all, or what we the audience learn. And yet there's this feeling at the end, as Orlando sits under an ancient oak tree and stares, brown-eyed, out at the viewer, and some spacey angel-types sing on the soundtrack, that something very, very significant has happened to all of us.

PLAYING AT THE HARVARD FILM ARCHIVES
JULY 23 - JULY 29

Bogusl Potter's Orlando is about nothing, nothing, despite the poetic passages and ethereal cinematography. (And let me add that Kenneth Branagh's Henry V and the Gerard Depardieu-starring Cyrano seemed to me similarly phony pretenders with philosophic veneers which have fooled far too many people.) Sally Potter can't direct and, worse, for the high humor of Woolf's Orlando, she certainly can't direct comedy. The "funny" scenes on screen make me yearn for Moe, Larry and Curly.

On the other hand, Quentin Crisp, pioneering gay activist for The Naked Civil Servant, makes a prim and perfectly rouged Queen Elizabeth I.

THE OAK

Directed and written by Lucian Pintilie. At the Harvard Film Archives, July 23-July 29.

Nicolae Ceausescu is dead and gone as Romanian dictator, but the country remains a cultural/ political/ economic mess. When filmmakers try their craft these days, the usual result is fierce, negative, black comedy. No post-Revolution Rumanian film has been so praised as The Oak, a bleak farce set in the final days of Ceausescu's beyond-Orwellian rule. This film chronicles the attempt of one valiant woman to stand up to the Byzantine Communist Party apparatus. The arrival of The Oak is a coup for the Harvard Film Archives, where the film has its Boston-area premiere.

Gerald Peary has been a film critic for Boston Review, the Real Paper, has authored six books on cinema and is currently teaching film at B.U.

WALTHAM
131 Main Street
893-7500

If it were a planet, it would be Pluto. An island in the stream. A speck of rock in some parallel universe. Remote. Isolated. As far from reality as we know it or could ever begin to imagine or comprehend it.

until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

We realize another bottled water is the farthest thing from your mind. May we suggest one that's even farther?

Iceland is like no other place on earth. Within a whisper of the Arctic Circle, it is enveloped by the sea. So apart is it from the rest of the world, you could journey south and not see land again

As you can well imagine, the air here is remarkably clear, the land virtually indistinguishable from that which it has been for millennia. And the water. Let us tell you about the water.

We call it Akva. A spring water that flows up from a place far below the ice and rock. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled: And of such a purity that it is difficult, if ' not impossible to conceive of another quite like it.

We think you will agree once you've tried Akva for yourself. What you will discover is a surprisingly soft taste. Crisp. Clear. Free of sodium. Free of impurities of every sort. The end result of a natural, geophysical purifying process unique to Iceland.

We can understand, of course, your lack of excitement upon hearing the news of yet another spring water. There are, we know, so many. All of which would have you believe they are the purest thing since the angels.

We do think, however, you will find Akva refreshingly different and worth the modest price of sampling. To do so, we suggest your favorite corner market or deli.

There now, you see? It's just like we've already told you. There really does exist a chance to find a genuinely pure water in this world. Even if it is a bit remote.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

Nobody's Perfect

". . .Crasnick takes his childhood memories off the psychiatrist's couch and onto the comedy stage. . ."

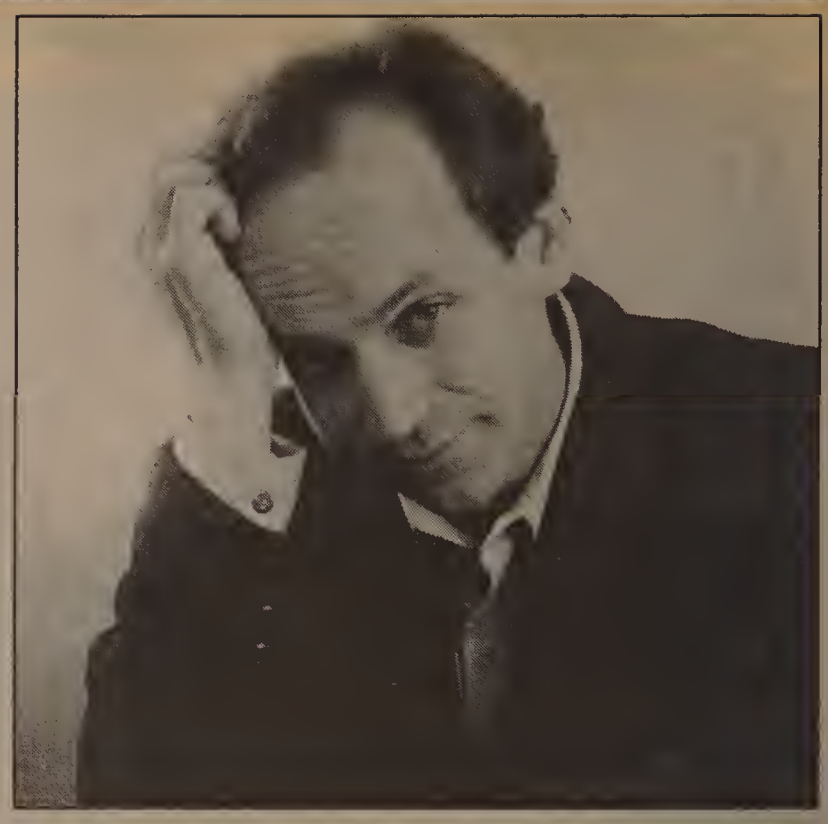
Hamlet, the Prince of Denmark, had a problem. His father, the king, died. His uncle, Claudius, then became king and quickly married his mother. He hated his uncle, but his problems soon grew worse. He met his dead father's ghost who told Hamlet that he was murdered by Claudius, and that he wanted Hamlet to take revenge by killing his uncle. Hamlet had what you might call a dysfunctional family.

Ed Crasnick's family did not suffer quite the same family traumas as Hamlet's, but to hear him tell it, he had problems of his own: he grew up as the son of his parents, the nephew of his aunts and uncles, and was the victim of a late 60s childhood surrounded by his Jewish family, his three-decker Dorchester house, his residence on Nantasket Beach, and Ed Sullivan.

Crasnick's new one man show I'm Not Perfect, featured now through August 8 at Catch a Rising Star, gives us a glimpse of his familial oddities.

"I'm 32 years old," Crasnick relates. "I see my family and in an hour I'm regressing at the speed of light....that's all it takes now is an hour...it's like they're running a self-esteem Lens Crafters: a complete loss of identity in about an hour."

IF YOU GO

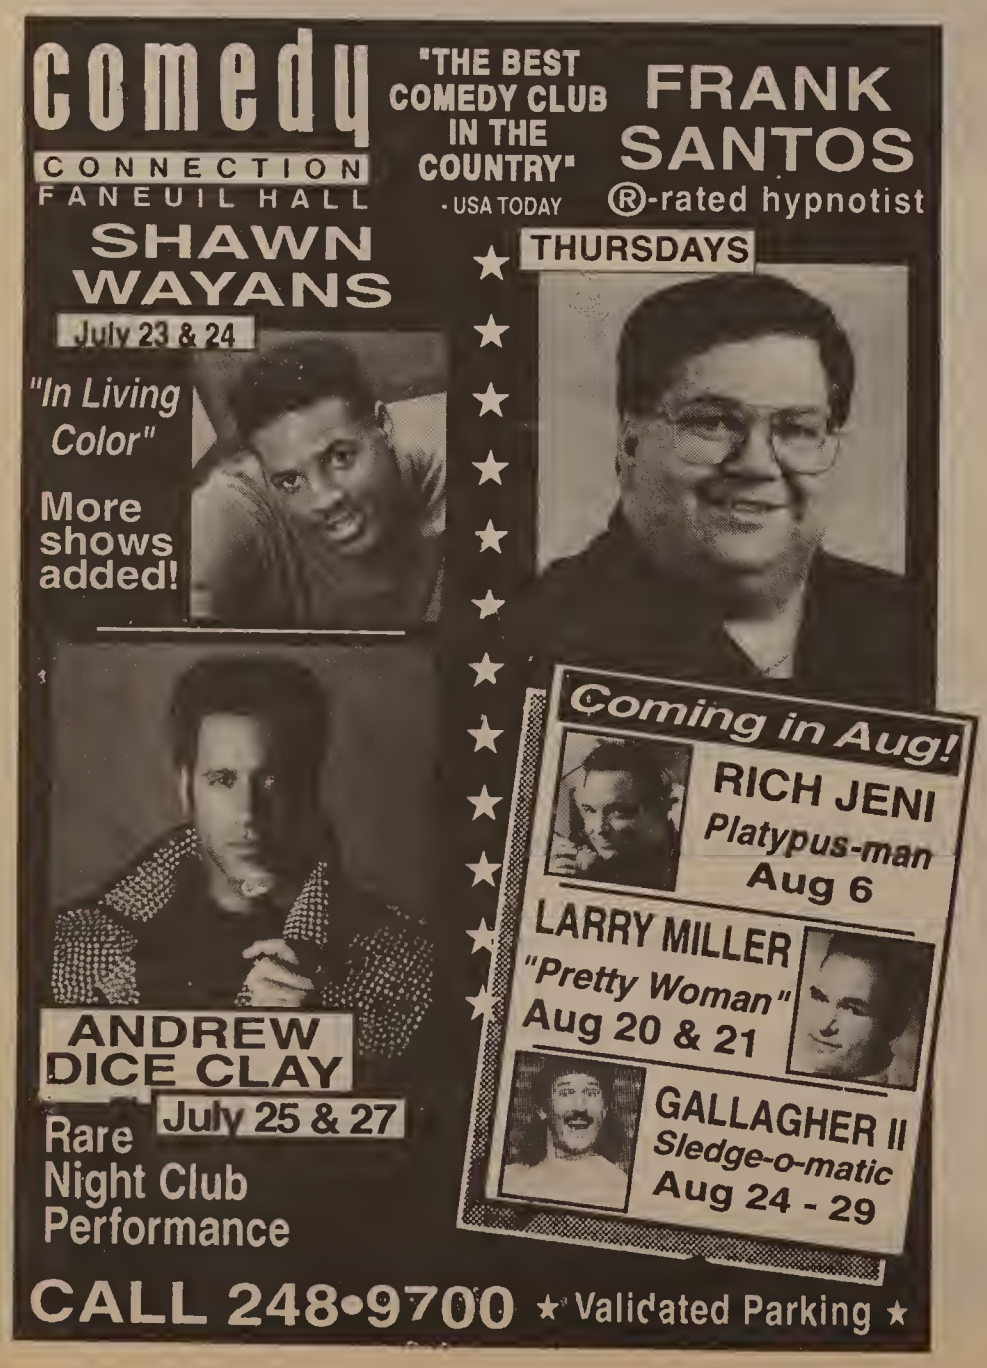


Ed Crasnick

Will be at Catch a Rising Star
76 Warrenton St.
Boston
July 15th-August 8th
Call 426-3737 for Reservations

Crasnick tells of how his mother welcomes him home with a combination of food and tragic health news, corned beef with a side of his aunt's stroke. "It's like a psycho sandwich," he explains.

Crasnick also shares how he felt as a child living with his parents. The most touching of his tales revolves around learning to ride his bike. In recalling his feeling of exhilaration when his father first let go of his two wheeler Crasnick enthusiastically remembers thinking "I'm so happy. I'm getting away from my family." Unfortunately for the young comedian, he turned back to make sure his father did not let go of the bike because of a heart attack, whereupon he ran into a tree and broke his arm in two places. The moral of the story? "When you're moving ahead in life and you're starting to feel free and happy and you're getting away from your family, just keep going, man! Don't look back."



While his standup offers a wide array of his adult family-related neuroses, it lacks one major factor. Crasnick offers his feelings about his family both present and past, but he never explains precisely what happened in his childhood to make him have such feelings. This is the void which I'm Not Perfect fills. Through the plethora of characters portrayed in the show, Crasnick presents slices of his childhood life which provide the audience with insights into his less-than-functional background.

ONE PSYCHO SANDWICH TO GO, PLEASE: Comedian Ed Crasnick at Catch a Rising Star on July 15

Crasnick takes his childhood memories off the psychiatrist's couch and onto the comedy stage. He entertains, but he also takes a step which many of would not have the courage to do: he shares his life story with the audience. From his childhood to his career in show business and other personal moments, I'm Not Perfect bares Crasnick's soul for all to see. And he does it five times a week.

The ghost of Hamlet's father asked his son to remember him, and Ed Crasnick's performance will do the same of you.

CAFE BUDAPEST

"... It Might Just Give a Whole New Meaning To the Term 'Power Lunch' ..."

Entering Cafe Budapest is like taking a step back in time, not merely due to the menu or the luxurious old world decor, but to the complete attention to detail and service. The legendary establishment, under the guidance of Dr. Hedy Rev Kury, has been awarded a five star diamond award for 1992 and 1993, and the newly-established Di Rona award for 92/93. We were, therefore, all the more curious: was this restaurant really worth all of the accolades? What better way to find out than to take advantage of the reasonably priced, all-inclusive lunch menu.

The cafe is in a charmingly rustic room, straight from the Hungarian countryside. Dark wood beams, ceramic plates and pottery, and stucco facades adorned with mirrors and hurricane lamps gave the ambiance of a local eatery in Hungary. A huge wood paneled mantel and hearth completed the experience of warmth and hospitality, while traditional Hungarian music played softly in the background.

BOSTON

There were twelve lunch selections at an all inclusive price of $14.95, in addition to à la carte items that ranged from $14.50 to $16.50. The choices included crepes, omelets, chicken and veal paprikas, stuffed cabbage and rice pilaf à la Gypsy Baron, three soups, and several lavish hors d'oeuvres of goose liver with truffles, herring, and several presentations of caviar. You may ask "Who eats this way?" but it might just give a whole new meaning to the term "power lunch."

Soup of the day, Cream of Broccoli, was a creamy (but suspiciously neon green) flavorful puree with chunks of broccoli, topped with some crunchy fried noodles, and proved a pleasant starter to our meal. The house salad was a nice mix of iceberg, watercress, onion, cucumber, a token radicchio leaf and sieved hard boiled egg with the house vinaigrette, which of course included fresh paprika.

The seven prix-fixe entrees included beef and veal Gulyas, Stroganoff and even a Cotelette de Boeuf à la Esterhazy. We dined on a special of beef with mushrooms in a paprika sauce accompanied by homemade noodles, and another entrée of stuffed cabbage with potatoes. Both were outstanding and delicately prepared. The beef dish was very tender and aromatic. The stuffed cabbage was my idea of soul food - a hearty preparation of a smoked ham filling accompanied by extra slices of ham – and the paprika sauce was velvety smooth. To accompany our meals we chose a traditional Egri Bikavar red wine, which was full, robust, and a good accompaniment to both meals.

After licking our plates absolutely clean, it was time to think about dessert. The included dessert was fresh strawberries with heavy cream. But who could experience a typical Hungarian meal without sampling the proverbial strudel? Not us! The cherry strudel was wrapped in very delicate layers and refreshingly tart compared to the American version which can often be over-bearingly sweet, and was accompanied by a very flavorful cup of coffee.

In all, our experience at The Cafe Budapest was most pleasurable and we'd highly recommend getting re-acquainted with the establishment whether for lunch or dinner. Though we can't promise such a complete experience as we had with an Eastern Orthodox priest as a fellow diner, we can promise an enjoyable meal while partaking in a little bit of old Budapest in downtown Boston. ❑

ESTATE BOTTLING:

Romance and Reality

At one point during a wine-tasting dinner I conducted last month, I was describing what I felt were the unique virtues of a Sonoma County Chardonnay my company represents. I noted, among other factors, that the grapes which produced the wine originated from several distinct zones within Sonoma, including cooler coastal areas like Carneros and Russian River, and sites further inland within the Alexander Valley and Chalk Hill districts, The complex harmony of flavor sensations we experienced were the result then of blending among these less ripe higher acid Chardonnay lots and those from the warmer vineyards which display richer; texture and fuller fruit flavor.

One of the guests was puzzled. "This tastes wonderful, " he said, "but it's not an estate-bottled wine."

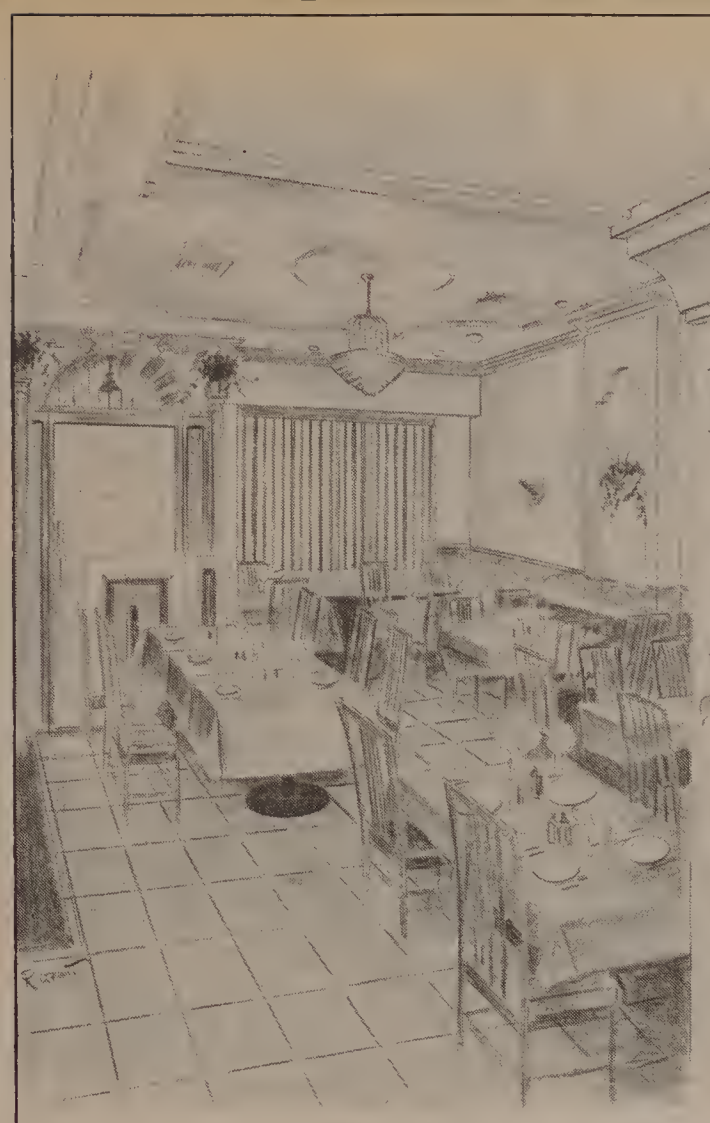
I encouraged him to continue because I did not see the contradiction.

"It's just that you said the Chardonnay tasted good because the grapes came from different areas but we always hear that wines made from one particular vineyard are better."

Of all the romantic myths surrounding wine he had hit upon the most cherished: that quality and character inherently result from an artisan vintner harvesting his ancestral lands and bottling small batches of wine. Truly fine wine, we believe, must reflect the special loving care which Jacques, or Angelo, or Charlie lavishes on his vines, his intimate knowledge of their behavior vintage after vintage, and his ability to coax magic from their capricious grapes.

As with most myths the propagation of this image serves deeper purposes: to enhance the commercial value of certain pieces of real estate. Because there are many buyers and production is necessarily limited, some wines are able to command better prices. In reality, although it confers a powerful marketing advantage, estate bottling has no bearing on quality, It does not, in and of itself, make a wine more "authentic."

Anyone assuming it guarantees superiority will eventually learn some painful and expensive lessons.



Among the world's finest wines many, of course, reflect the particular growing conditions of a vineyard site. In a real sense they give voice to the land. Writers love to point up the differences between such wines, which express terroir (a French term describing all environmental influences on the grapes), and others characterized as the product of impersonal industrial processing. On the one hand we have indelible images of soil, art, individuality; on the other, technological control, manipulation, sameness.

What does the term "estate bottled" mean though? Beyond the expectations encouraged by marketing agents, is there any necessary connection between estate bottling and the notion that wines may show heightened character if they express the particularity of a vineyard?

Absolutely not. "Estate bottled" carries no legal implication whatsoever that the wine is made on the same plot of land where the grapes are grown. The basic requirement is simply that ownership of the production facility as well as the vineyard sources be concentrated in one company's hands. Estate bottled wines may - therefore comprise blends originating from a variety of different vineyards (which may be several miles apart) as long as each of them is owned by the bottler.

Misleading? The French term "mis en bouteille au chateau" or "au domaine" on a label signifies that the wine was bottled on the property." Does this mean that "estate bottled" Chambertin is made at the Chambertin vineyard? Never; it means only that an owner of Chambertin vines transported the grapes to another property of his in Burgundy and made them separately into wine there. ❑

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

General

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Bull & Finch Pub (Cheers)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

Frogg Lane Bar & Grill
720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos, B-7. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

Sun. night - DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served until midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled and draft beer, but the Guiness shouldn't be missed. Open 7 days a week until 2AM and ample parking in rear. Casual dress.

O'Leary's
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

My Own Personal Best

Lauren Dare's Best Places to be Bad.

Well, just so I wouldn't feel left out of the swing of things, I decided to do a little round-up of my own personal bests and worsts from my forays into the Boston bar scene. Please keep in mind that these are highly personal, subjective, and opinionated reviews, that do not in any way express the views or opinions of The Improper Bostonian, the President of the U.S., Charo, or anybody else, for that matter, and I in no way expect you to agree with them. Nor do I care. Are we ready?

Daisy Buchanan's: Best Place To Score With Someone When You're So Drunk You Don't Care Who You Score With. It's late at night, you're three, no, four, sheets to the wind, and the person sitting at the stool at the end of the bar is looking mighty fine, until your friend informs you that the object of your affections is a police dog who is accompanying the cop who just came in to bust up a fight. Whoops.

Armani Express: Best Place To Go and Be Really, Really Pretentious. Bring your cell-phone, your Oliver Peoples sunglasses, and an attitude, sit their sidewalk cafe, and feel ultimately superior to the pedestrians sweating past.

Small Planet Bar and Grill: Best Place To Chill Out And Be P.C.

Joe's American Bar and Grill: Best Place To Start Out Your Night. Right in the center of the Boston universe, Joe's has it all: Newbury Street patio, every (oh, no, I'm going to say it again) thirty-something yuppie type in a twenty mile radius, and a gossip network system to let you know exactly where the place to go that night is.

Generation X: Best Time At A Club I've Ever Had Without Hooking Up With Someone. Gen X has definitely filled a gap in Boston nightlife. Going there is like going to a party at someone's house (big house), where you can hang out, drink, mingle, and party with the most eclectic and diverse bunch of people I've seen this side of a Benetton ad.

Zanzibar: Worst Time At A Club I've Ever Had Trying To Avoid Hooking Up With Someone. Good Grief, Charlie Brown. Going to Zanzibar unattached is like swimming with the sharks during feeding time.

Europa: Best Place To Go Pretend You're European. Even if you're not a Euro, you can still have a great time doing the kissy kissy thing, spraying champagne, dancing on the furniture to outrageous international club music, and behaving like you're never going to grow up, and you don't have to go to work tomorrow.

Hardrock Cafe: Best Place To Go For Any Record Release Party Or Private Gig. Isaac Tigrett knows how to throw a bash, and the Hard Rock puts out a generous spread. Worst Place to go any other time. The diner-outfitted waitresses and multitudes of tourists snapping pictures and celebrating birthdays wears thin pretty fast.

Cactus Club: Best Place To Get Sautéed, Jelloed or Bit. Also probably the closest any of us will ever get to a bison, living or dead.

Bills' Bar: Best Place To Go Hang Out On Sunday Nights. The weekend warriors are off the streets, and amateur hour is over. Only the pros go out on Sunday, and they know how to play. Start off at Bill's, then go trip the light fantastic next door at Venus de Milo.

Dad's Beantown Diner: Best Place To Go Pick Up Someone Under Twenty. Probably two-thirds of the clientele can count their age just using their fingers and toes. If you're into that kind of thing.

So there they are. I know, I know. This is by no means a complete list, and I'm sure I left out a lot of other fun categories, and I'm sure there are many more places that are bester or worster out there that you would put in if you had my column, but as I said before, this was my Best and Worst. ■

Dark Story Lines

The Burden of the Ideal Female Virtue

The "Story lines" might be dark, with songs that address the death of a friend, the burden of ideal female virtue or women's preoccupation with staying slim. But don't expect The Angel in the House, the second album by Boston duo the Story, to sound like a statement of feminism or pessimism. It's not their nature.

"I think it's a little more oblique," songwriter and acoustic guitarist Jonatha Brooke says of the music she concocts with vocal foil Jennifer Kimball. "I don't want to go around shaking my fist."

The oblique angles extend to the duo's sublime harmonies, a fragile, ethereal balance of melody and dissonance that developed when the two singers met at Amherst College in the early 80s.

"That was sort of what drew us together," Brooke says of their approach to harmony. "I was influenced by choral and Broadway music, and I think that's where I got that kind of flavor for counterpoint."

Indeed, the duo has a rare, offbeat vocal chemistry. At times, the Story's stellar 1991 debut "Grace in Gravity" (reissued by Elektra last year) brought to mind Jane Siberry, Suzanne Vega and the Roches, but Brooke and Kimball are their own novel match.

"When we first started out, the Roches were a big inspiration, especially in their whole shtick," Brooke says. "We really loved their stage wackiness and their sense of humor. I think we still really appreciate that irreverence, 'cause a lot of [our] material is very intense. But I think we feel the need to represent the people that we are, at the same time as we're singing these intense songs."

On The Angel in the House, those songs include "So Much Mine" (an ode to streetwise girls from their mothers' perspective), "Missing Person Afternoon" (an impressionistic dialogue with a friend who died) and the title track, named after a Victorian poem about ideal female virtue. Author Virginia Woolf used the phrase to describe the phantom which keeps women from pursuing desired goals.

"I still feel the pull of that phantom," Brooke says. "It goes, 'Clean the house, you don't really need to write a song today, make sure all the laundry's done, and nest!'"

Brooke actually nests with Alain Mallet, her husband and Story keyboardist, whose love of Latin jazz is reflected in the more fleshed out arrangements of the new album. That flavor is evident from the horn-goosed "When Two and Two Are Five" to the cha-cha cushion of novelty number "Fatso," a seeming successor to frisky crowd-pleaser "Dog Dreams."

"It's sort of a tongue-in-cheek, but very serious, poke at that whole mentality that's an obsession with so many women," says Brooke, whose training as a dancer helped her sidestep the fatso syndrome. "It's part of the whole Angel in the House mentality that keeps us from more important things. Instead, we think about food all day, and 'Oh God, I can't have that' and 'I hope I lose ten pounds by Friday!'"

For the Story, those more important things now include nationwide promotion for the new album. But the duo will sing July 27 at the Jackson Homestead in Newton as part of "Arts in the Park," before returning with their full band to play the Somerville Theater Oct. 2.

ELSEWHERE

Slippery, jam-laced arrangements bridging art-rock and bluegrass are on tap when Phish headlines Great Woods July 24. R&B-rock dynamo Terence Trent D'Arby is bound to upstage Duran Duran there July 26, then look for Tina Turner to take Great Woods by storm July 29. It's better than the movies. ❑

Freelance writer/photographer Paul Robicheau has covered music for more than a decade. He is a Boston correspondent for Rolling Stone magazine and his features and reviews appear regularly in the Boston Globe.

Lazy Afternoons

A Quick Tanglewood Tour

There's little that could be more pleasant than a summer weekend at Tanglewood. You lie on the lawn with a picnic, music playing in "the shed," birds twittering, the mountains pale in the distance. Around you sits the most astonishing range of people, from glissando-glazed New York literati to poker-playing college kids. In the dog days of summer, the Boston Symphony retreats to the country – a nice Edith Wharton touch – and provides us with two delightful concerts a weekend: one at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday, and one at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday. Their programs are well-chosen and varied, and the experience as a whole is pretty luxurious.

For those who run their eyes over a Tanglewood schedule and see nothing but a jumble of meaningless names, I'd suggest the Saturday, August 7 concert, which features Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony (No. 4) and violin concerto, the latter played by child prodigy Midori. Mendelssohn's music is emotional, but still quite light and comprehensible. You'll probably recognize some of the tunes from the violin concerto, if only because they play it in the background whenever Bugs Bunny cross-dresses and weeps at musket-point. You might also consider the all-Mozart concert on Sunday, August 22, featuring some of Mozart's most dramatic symphonic music.

For fans of choral and vocal music, I'd suggest the Sunday, August 15 performance of Haydn's oratorio, "The Creation," conducted by Simon Rattle. It's a stunning work which leads the listener from the chaos before created matter to the dawn of man, featuring both barn-storming choruses and immensely moving, delicate moments, like a breathtaking depiction of the first sunrise.

Those who love West Side Story might be interested in Leonard Bernstein's "Age of Anxiety" Symphony (Saturday July 24), a work which proves that Bernstein's genius lay in his musical schizophrenia. The piece slides brilliantly from classical symphony to nightclub solo to glitzy film tune with no seam and no shame. The concert is capped off with one of Gustav Mahler's shorter symphonies (the Fourth), which clocks in at just under an hour with his usual vision of heaven and etc.

On week-nights, consider the Muir String Quartet's performance of Dvorak's broad, prairie-scented "American" Quartet and Schubert's "Death and the Maiden" Quartet (Thursday July 22); or two brief 17th century operas by Purcell and Charpentier performed by Baroque divinity William Christie, who will be descending on Wednesday, August 11. Fans of John Williams and the Pops should keep in mind July 20 ("An Evening of Unforgettable Love Songs") and Tuesday, August 13 ("A Night at the Movies") — perfect music for a summer evening, especially a summer evening on the planet Tatoonie

So pack a picnic. Set out for the mountains. Leave the main roads and travel by those rambling, rural lanes, unless you're one of those people who's afraid of getting lost and being eaten by inbred farmers. You'll have a spectacular time. It's part of that halcyon days of our youth thing.

MIT MUSEUM
265 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
For only a $2 donation, visitors can explore many wonderful exhibits that you don't have to be a rocket scientist to appreciate. First, there's "Crazy After Calculus: Humor at MIT," which chronicles some of the best college pranks ever committed. For the more science-minded, there's "MathSpace," a hands-on exploration of geometry that lets you tinker with math playthings.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
The Firestone silver collection, pieces of which are on display until Aug. 8, contains extremely rare 18th century wares made in Paris and other French cities known for silversmiths. An art nouveau exhibit featuring the work of Klimt, Munch, Kandinsky and Bradley is on view through Oct. 3. Approximately 125 of the museum's finest watercolors are on display until Aug. 15 in "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." On view through Aug. 1 is John Singleton Copley's "Watson and Shark," the two large versions of his famous shark attack painting. MFA's new textile gallery is now open, featuring "From Arts and Crafts to Art Deco" through Aug. 29. MFA also presents "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Part 2" until September. Call 267-9300.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Science Park, Boston
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (25 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle — all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Through Sept. 12. Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. ASL interpreters will be on hand July 10. Call 589-0270.

MUSEUM OF TRANSPORTATION
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Muscle Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. Call 522-6547 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM
Central Wharf, Boston
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious—and dangerous—sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND SPORTS MUSEUM
Cambridgeside Galleria, Cambridge
The Sox last won the World Series in 1918 - ancient history, huh? Well, it's actually not that long ago in the scope of the NESM. This place has everything that has anything to do with New England sports, including lots of interactive exhibits - like one where you can catch a pitch thrown by Roger Clemens. The best thing is that it's open the same hours as the mall, so you can go on a weeknight and have the place all to yourself.

OLD STATE HOUSE
206 Washington St., Boston
This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

PAUL REVERE HOUSE
19 North Square, North End
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338 for more information.

THE USS CONSTITUTION MUSEUM
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

THEATER

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
76 Warrenton St., Boston
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work. A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912 for times and ticket prices.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
74 Warrenton St., Boston
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, Shear Madness is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. Set in the city in which it plays, Shear Madness allows the audience to become sleuths and solve the murder mystery. Call 426-5225 for times and ticket prices.

IMPROVBOSTON
at the Back Alley Theatre
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
After a hot day at the beach, this comedy troupe's new production The Clam Bake Variations is not to be missed. Show dates are July 22-25 at 7 p.m.; tickets are $15, $12 for students and seniors. Call 576-1253 for reservations.

KENDALL CAFE
233 Cardinal Medeiros Ave., Cambridge
Well, it sounds kinky to us: Steps Theater Company presents The Throb of Life, an ongoing, continuing radio drama for adults only. Admission is $7; call 499-9580 for reservations and info.

MEDIEVAL MANOR
246 E. Berkeley St., Boston
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of "Dark Ages" dining, this satiric musical transports its audience back to a

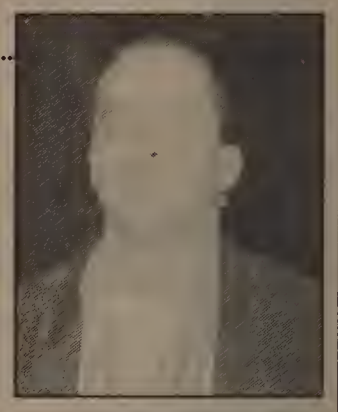
WOMAN ON THE STREET

"Behind My Back My Friends Say. . ."

BY LESLIE

Todd, 35, South End
"I leave the longest messages, I never clean my apartment and I'm late for everything."

Wendy, 25, Newton
"I'm too sensitive and tend to get upset over stupid things."



Lee, 23, Boston
"My friends say that I have the worst taste in men."

Ed, 27, Brighton
"I talk too much about things I am really interested in – like snowboarding."

Zoe, 50, Watertown
"They say how obvious it is that I'm not a real blond."

Paul, 28, Cambridge
"I'm glad I'm not him!"

THE OTHER WHITE MEAT
at the Back Alley Theatre
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
Tired of the same old comedy chicken? Then try a taste of The Other White Meat, Boston's acclaimed sketch comedy troupe. "The Comedy of Menace" will feature surreal skits, dark comedy, monologues and musical pieces. Runs July 27-Aug. 1 at 8 p.m., with an additional 5 p.m. matinee Aug. 1. Tickets are $12 Tue.-Thur. and $15 Fri.-Sun. Call 576-1119 for more information.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this summer will be for Miss Saigon the tragic love story of an American G.I. and the native woman he left in Vietnam. It's a must-see, but it's only here until Sept. 12. Call 931-2222 for times and ticket prices.

WORKSHOPS

BOSTON CENTER FOR SOCIAL THERAPY
25 Huntington Ave. Ste. 328, Boston

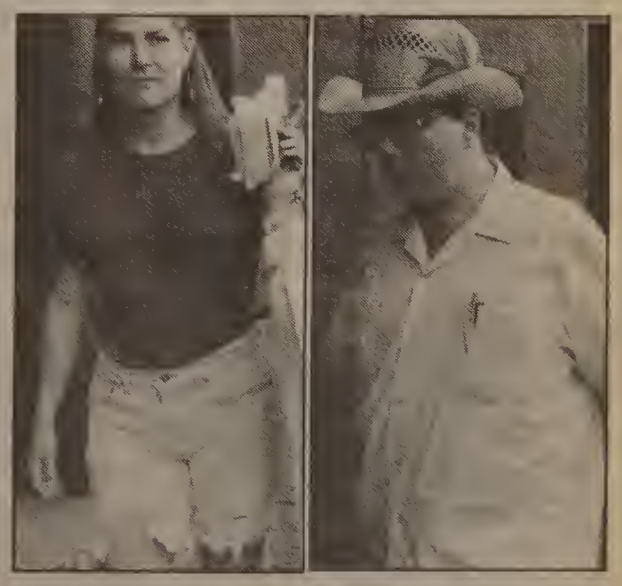
Fashion Dos and Don'ts



The heat has been unrelenting and so have we in our search to expose what to wear and what not to wear in the scorching summer weeks still ahead. This issue we continue our fashion quest for coolness, composure, and class.

Not only has this Bostonian broken the fashion commandment "Thou shalt not wear sneakers with a suit," he has brought about the clash of the textures! Put that wool checked blazer away and loosen that God-awful, widely-striped, polyester tie. Better yet, burn it! The properly shaded tie-less Bostonian shows that there is only one way to dress for success: with pizzazz and confidence.

Whoops – don't fall out! This Bostonian's long-sleeved, peek-a-boo style is no way to stay airconditioned when it's humid out. Perhaps she should have opted for a little black slip dress; sandled and sexy, this Newburian can move smoothly from an afternoon of shopping to an evening out on the town.

And for a last look at some definite don'ts. Though the grunge look is in, don't wear shorts that look like your German Shepherd used them for a midnight snack. (Let's just hope whatever she's carrying is a new outfit.) And finally, never, never wear those stupid Colombian coffee, multi-pocketed, lounge shirts. This cowboy was unfortunately fooled into purchasing one from the pages of his favorite National Inquirer Magazine. He should have saved his money and invested in a better hat!

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

JULY 21-AUGUST 3, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too.): Inhale.

Leo begins Thursday, the 22nd at 9:51 a.m., but the big day is Sunday the 25th; the time, 10:50 a.m.; the event, a Mercury station, a shift in motion from retrograde to direct; the result, who knows for sure? Even after Mercury lurches forward, you can't expect progress or enlightenment to descend as quickly as you'd like. First you'll have to retrace the (faltering) steps you took, learn more about what you thought were the facts, and then, after Mercury opposing Neptune and Uranus for the third time on the 30th shows you another angle altogether, figure out your next move. Simple stuff for some, difficult for those who can't forgive; we all forget. However, if perfection is your goal, you'll have a grand time going for it. Ballsy Mars trines the Neptune-Uranus conjunction in Capricorn shortly after Mercury shifts gears on Sunday. It's been a long time (two years) since Mars was last in Virgo, the sign that actually enjoys cleaning up. Perhaps Mars can help heal the health-care system, the food processing industry and the macho madness of the armed services. But trines, like rewards and remedies, have to be acknowledged and appreciated to be effective; otherwise the moment is missed, its benefits taken for granted. But hey, it's summer, we've vacated. Full moon August 2 at 3:10 a.m. on Leo-Aquarius axis. Exhale.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Major career move with positive results as your Mars ruler favors Uranus and Neptune in your midheaven, planets responsible for turning you into a revolutionary, e visionary in your field. Your strategy seems to be working, apply gentle pressure to the establishment, your boss or parents and they'll buy in too. Keep in mind that right now you're performing a service to those who in turn serve you: your healing community, a co-worker, the cleaning lady, the checker at the market, whoever. Passion it ain't.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

If you're still riled up, going hot and heavily at the source of yesterday's fury: chill. Much more important than a win or loss of a lover's quarrel is the support you'll get (particularly if you're born close to May 11) from artists and entertainers here and abroad, from children and childlike playmates. As energetic Mars in Virgo trines the Capricorn planets, all earth signs – Taurus too – are blessed by a spurt of creativity. Besides, around the 1st, you'll come to appreciate the steady support of an old pro et the game, one who's currently holding a winning hand.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Let's hope that the boon coming your way is a lot more fun than just en improvement on the house, the family or your current domestic scene. As Mars leads you into an easy relationship with other people's money, financial aid appears when and where you least expect it. And while it may be more complex than a simple summer pleasure weekend at the shore, whatever happens will capture (and keep) your attention for e while. Confusion and frustration ends as August begins.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

Here comes the cavalry! Retrograde Mercury's turnaround in Cancer is unnerving, so any support you get from determined relatives, neighbors and friends can be a great relief. Those more health-conscious, more organized than you come up with facts you can't put your finger on until Mercury concludes its little "two steps forward, one step back, twirl-around, twirl-around" dance through your sign. The Leo-Aquarius full moon changes a financial equation, perhaps your most significant relationship too.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

An intuitive hit about what to buy, how to best use your resources on Friday night. Pay attention because it sets the tone – certifiably harmonious – for the rest of the week. Now isn't that a dainty dish to set before the King? Mars in your counting-house finally solves the dilemma put forth by the planets that have been toying with erratic working conditions, obligations or your interest in assorted healing practices. What have you been ingesting? The Leo full moon August 2 brings all this to light.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Decisive Mars in Virgo lets you cut through a mass of crap as it rewards your creative impulse, your idea of fun. Taking a risk is easy during a trine aspect because there's no tension. It's obvious what has to be done and your actions flow from that realization. All this while your Mercury ruler is changing direction! The shift from retro to direct usually throws you off balance, but in matters other than romance, you'll function like an intelligent human being this weekend. Not so next weekend.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

If only you were in therapy! Excellent aspects from probing Mars in your house of the unconscious to your Capricornian house of childhood memories can slice years off the process. But if you're trying to deal with genetics, family roots and your psychological foundation by yourself, then the insights that come through dreaming will be a big help. Confusion about work, the direction your career is taking, etc. – due to Mercury's change of direction – continues for the next 10 days. Why worry? Be happy.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Mercury's flip opens your mail, sends manuscripts and messages from abroad, picks up where your curiosity dumped you when Mercury turned retrograde. Vacation's over, but this is a good time to travel, do research, all the stuff that seemed important four short weeks ago. To help you along, your Mars co-ruler provides easy access to publicity, publications, plastic and electronic art forms, film (Neptune) and tape (Uranus). It's been two years since a friend made such enticing rewards so available. Remember?

SAGITARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Mers is in your midheaven, all's right with the world. And if it isn't, by the time courageous Mars takes on the mystifying planets in your money house, it will be. Getting to the heart of financial matters that have been confused and delayed by Mercury's retrogression could take longer than expected, but Martian aggressiveness helps you cut through red tape, family traditions and whatever else has been holding you in thrall. Career matters become clearer as you become better organized, more ambitious too.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

The paperwork starts flowing after Mercury turns direct on Sunday. You can probably sign the ones already on your desk, but just to be sure no questions remain, wait until next Friday's info comes in. Sometimes you don't have to protect yourself, – the planets in Capricorn create situations, attract people that'll do it for you, – and sometimes you do. Meanwhile ballsy Mars gives you courage to change your personal appearance – nip here, tuck there, stylize everywhere – so that you're ready for a romantic August.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Finally, a truly appreciative, warm and supportive audience. The joys of Leo companionship become more evident – sunny smiles, star-filled nights, an innate understanding of your occasional quirks. Added to this unbeatable combo is a horny Mars in your house of sexual exploration this weekend trining (rewarding) your progressive, freedom-loving Uranus ruler. Sounds like a perfect set-up for an experiment in self-expression, similar to what (should have?) happened two summers ago. Next weekend: full moon in Aquarius, Venus beckons

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Look two ways. Mercury turning direct in your house of creative play, romance and risk opens the floodgates; your eau de vie should crest on the 30th when Mercury opposes your Neptune ruler for the third and final time this cycle. Meanwhile libidinous Mars in your house of partners adds a strong dose of sexuality to a casual friendship or professional peer-group relationship when it trines Neptune this weekend. You get a chance to get it on, clean up your act, and make beautiful music together.

by Mopsy Strange Kennedy

Yowling Yellow

At the tug of a small pin, circles and circles of squealing, ear-piercing sounds proliferate out of this little palm-sized yellow device called a Sports Paal (Personal Attack Alarm) by Quorum, sounds so vivid you can almost see them, sounds that make the guilty listener want to shout "I'll go away – shut that damn thing off!" This little aural yellowjacket both repels the attacker and draws (and how!) attention to the fact that there is a problem. Women who have been attacked often report that they become "mute" just when they need their voice, so this is a way of amplifying sound to the level of a madly multiplied symphony of alarm. It also happens to be pitched above the familiar car-opening squealers in the urban chorus, and could never be mistaken for anything less than a request for help. Like a beeper, it hooks on to a belt, and can be used while running.

Furthermore, should you have a purse you want to protect, you can arrange it so any tugging action at your purse will activate the alarm, and your assailant will be left holding a crying baby of a pocketbook. It's weatherproofed for outside action, but can also be used with its spring clip fastened to a door or window, the opening of which will provide the robber with a very loud surprise. Costs $34.

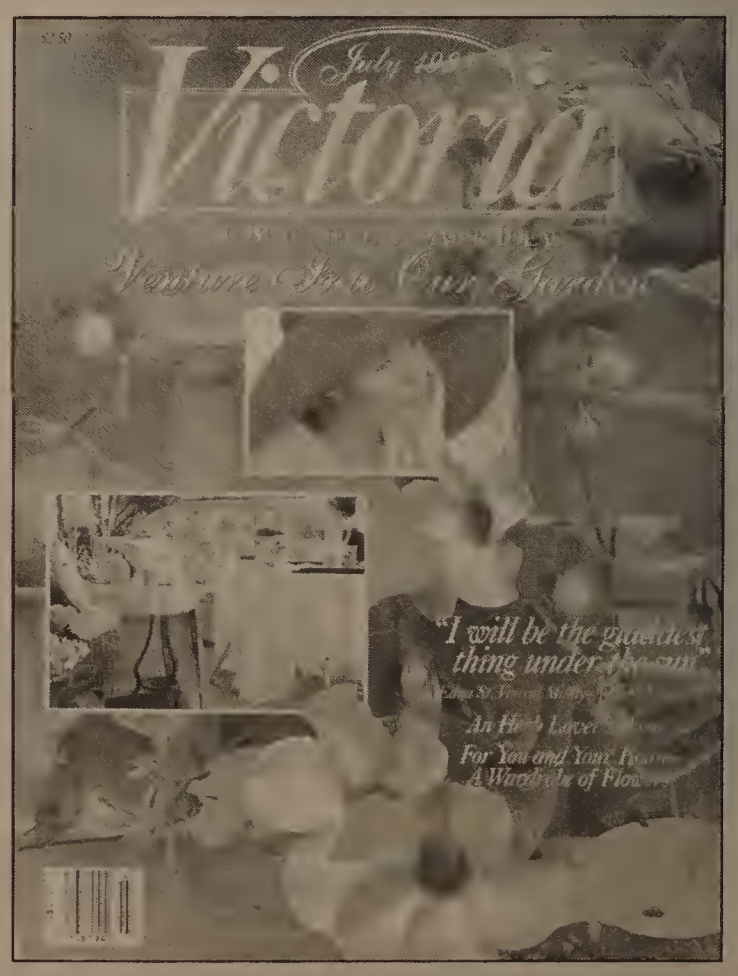
Roll, Roll, Roll Yourself, Gently Down The Street



For people who have taken the joys of running past the point of joy and into knee and back pains, or people who can't wait for winter to skate, then don't step – glide. Rollerblading, or In-Line Skating as it's officially called, is the low-impact and high-gorgeousness way to move along. Certified Instructor and competitive In-Line-r Linda Spencer has the bright-eyed optimism, confidence, encouragingness, and also the grace, that make a student dare to start trying out these urban zoomers. Once you are up on them, and padded to the gills, she demonstrates the breathing and the looseness required. Spencer also helps you practice the surprisingly splatty way of falling correctly, letting the padded arms and elbows and knees take the shock. Then there's "V-Walking," which clunkily pre-figures real skating, and "scissoring," which leads the way to the crucial, tricky act of stopping. Ribboning along in front of you, she demonstrates the effortless-looking, loooong plunging and rising motions that constitute the three basic components of blading: bend/stroke/together. Later, there are turns that recall figure skating, only looser. The sport can lead the talented to the racing circuit, roller hockey, street skate festivals or aesthetic commuting. Spencer teaches through St. Moritz in Boston and also privately for individuals, or small groups, and some deals involve skate rentals. What she calls "my own private skating rink," a park next to Neiman Marcus, is her Boston spot, and in Cambridge she uses the hills and dales of Fresh Pond. Group lessons cost $20 and private ones cost $35.

A Trip To The Moon On Gossamer Wing

Though Victoria magazine may purport to recall the Victorian era, its ethos is really more Victoria's Secret. Nothing floats and wafts through its exceedingly pleasant pages unless it's pretty. A little girl in a be-ribboned boater stands on a lawn looking at pink petit-fours on a white wicker table. In a dreamy pictorial about a grand old mansion in New Orleans, the text describes "mosquito netting that cascades over the bed like a bridal veil." On its fashion pages, the predominant tones are bisque and cream and beige and white, and whenever possible, there is lace. The soft and flowery arts are celebrated in features on painters or shopkeepers, and even the food runs to soft-focus lemon recipes or very photogenic and pale pasta ("stuffed nasturtium leaves" is as aggressively bitey as it gets). Though an indeterminate swathe of the past is what's celebrated here, things that are literally Victorian get top billing, and the camera's eye rests its soft-focus gaze on anything soporifically velvety, or pink. But always, the world created is one that's as free of strife as it is romantic. Writers who have the right poetic touch – Edna St. Vincent Millay, Virginia Woolf, – are included, even if they weren't Victorians. In an ad for a Victorian baby book, Winston Churchill is quoted as saying "There is no finer investment for any community than putting milk into babies." The one potentially jarring ad, for a decidedly non-Victorian fridge, recaptures the elegant spirit of the past by having a picture shot at twilight in which a woman is gazing wistfully out the many-paned window with ad copy that reads "The new Frigidaire. Built to age beautifully." Twelve issues cost $12.

Michelle Halsell

A Different Genre

Amidst the colorful canvases hanging in the gallery of the Boston Center for the Arts, up and coming film maker Michelle Halsell explains the characteristics of a different genre of urban film, one that works to break the stereotypes perpetuated by current Hollywood trends. "People have strong conceptions about what an urban film will be like, especially one that involves African - Americans. It's not always going to revolve around guns or gangs, or that kind of suffering. Everyone suffers for different reasons, and my characters suffer because of their art."

After months of fundraising and grueling production schedules, Michelle Halsell, producer, writer, director, is now putting the finishing touches on her first feature film, "Do You Deliver?", produced by Pilate Productions. With her vision almost realized, Halsell speaks of her supporters with genuine admiration. "I got my start at Blackside Productions as a volunteer, they're a minority owned organization that really goes out of their way to train their interns."

Before that, Halsell received a degree in Finance, and worked in Switzerland for the United Nations Counsel for Human Rights. "I was going to change the world then," she nods shyly, "But I just didn't have a stomach for politics. I know now that a key to my filmmaking involves getting my message across and entertaining at the same time. Just wait until you hear the sound track."

As for the film, Halsell has expertly constructed a commentary on an artist's relationship with their subject matter. Maxine, the main character, is a successful black artist famous for her urban landscapes that mainstream critics deem "universal of the black experience." What the galleries and papers don't know is that Maxine suffers from Agoraphobia, and as a result of her disease, Maxine, the voice of her people, cannot leave her apartment. "I wanted to deal with the artist's relationship with success, " Halsell explains, "Every artist wants to deal in what's around them. But once you're on Newbury Street or in Manhattan, how do you remain in touch with what you represent?"

It stands to reason that Halsell has definite opinions of her own on these issues, but points out that viewers will have to make their own conclusions. "As long as people leave feeling something," she urges," The ending has made some people angry, some sad. Both of those are fine with me, as long as nobody leaves feeling complacent."

Ultimately, it 's a different type of urban film, with a different kind of producer. On the subjectof her subject matter, Halsell reminds us all, "We're a diverse group of people, we have to try to tell all the stories." ❑

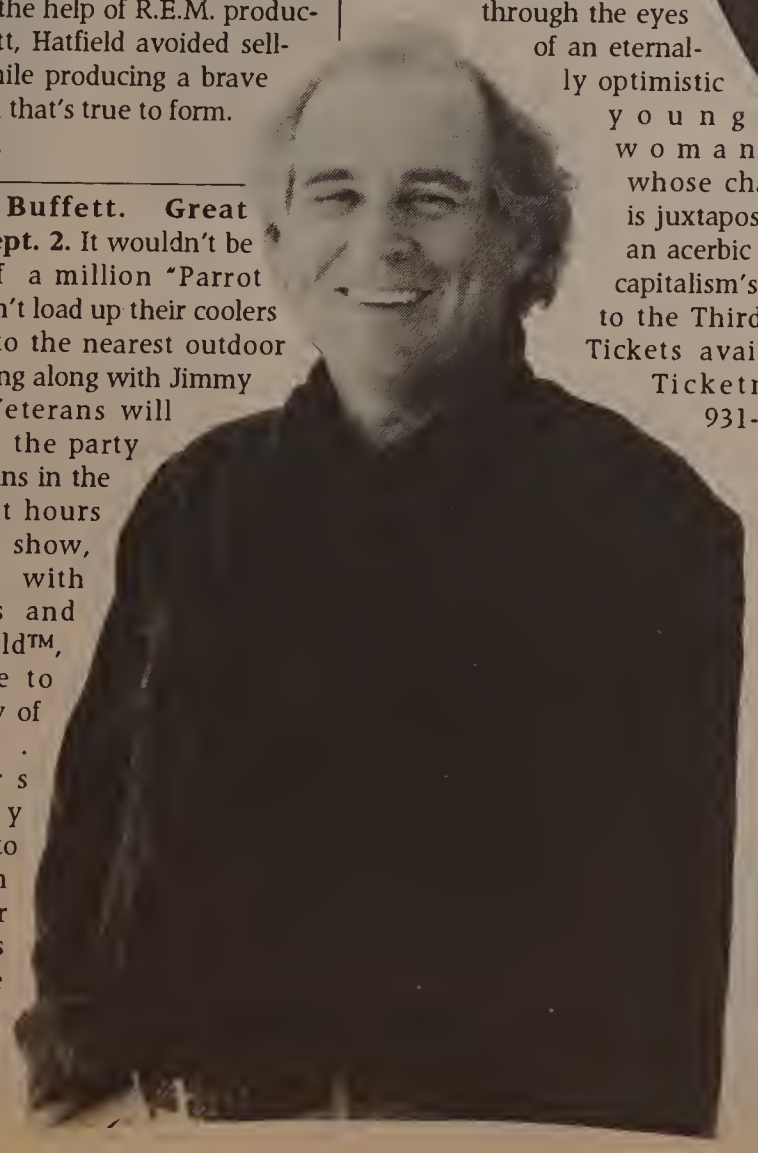
WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW



RECORDINGS

Smashing Pumpkins, Siamese Dream. Since their independent debut release Gish, this Chicago based quartet has been giving grunge a soul and hard rock depth, while never jeopardizing an ounce of artistic integrity. Now on a major label, more people than ever will finally experience material from four of the musicians that pioneered post-modern rock. Like its powerful predecessor, this album should be sold with a helmet. Available at Tower Records.

Juliana Hatfield, Become What You Are. Her first solo effort drew the attention of Atlantic records and resulted in a major label deal, but Hatfield's latest CD exudes none of the sanitized shine of mainstream pop. With the help of R.E.M. producer Scott Litt, Hatfield avoided selling out while producing a brave new album that's true to form.

CONCERT

Jimmy Buffett. Great Woods. Sept. 2. It wouldn't be summer if a million "Parrot Heads" didn't load up their coolers and flock to the nearest outdoor venue to sing along with Jimmy Buffett. Veterans will attest that the party always begins in the parking lot hours before the show, complete with cook outs and Cuervo Gold™, so be sure to pack plenty of limes. Rumors already abound as to the addition of one or more shows to the scheduled dates. Call Ticketmaster at 931-2000 or Great Woods for information on available tickets.

HAPPENINGS

Newport Jazz Festival. August 13-15, Newport, R.I. This legendary jazz festival began in 1954 but today features the likes of Ray Charles, Spyro Gyra, and Tito Puente. Located at historic Fort Adams State Park, folks can picnic on the grounds or shop among the dozens of craft displays. Call Ticketmaster for tickets at 931-2000, or the Jazz Festival Hotline at (401) 847-3700 for general information or directions.

THEATER

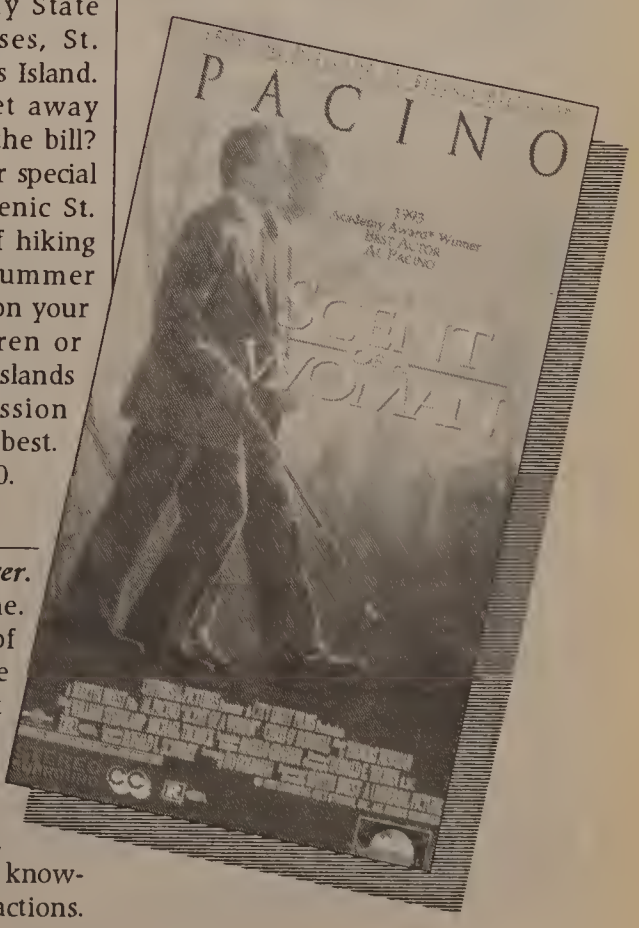
Miss Saigon. Wang Center for the Performing Arts. 7/14-9/12. From producer Cameron Mackintosh, the mind behind Les Miserables and Phantom of the Opera, comes another love story set against the ideological cynicism of the last American days in Vietnam. Finally in Boston, this narrative is told through the eyes of an eternally optimistic young woman, whose charm is juxtaposed with an acerbic satire on capitalism's relation to the Third World. Tickets available at Ticketmaster: 931-2000.

LINGERIE

Exotique. 186 South Street, Boston. Most will wonder why nobody thought of this sooner when they experience the "personalized assistance" of the sales women at this lingerie and swimwear boutique. Yes, these beauties will model clothing for patrons and put up with your dinner invitations with only one catch, you have to make a purchase. Worth it.

DAY CRUISE

Bay State Cruises, St. George's Island. Want to get away for the day but can't float the bill? For only $6.00 you and your special pal can book passage to scenic St. George's Island for a day of hiking and solitude away from summer crowds. Once ashore you're on your own to explore Fort Warren or wander to adjacent Harbor Islands via free Water Taxi. Recession entertainment almost at its best. For information, call 723-7800.



MOVIES

So I Married an Axe Murderer. Directed by Thomas Schlamme. Mike Myers had his share of bad luck with women, until he met Nancy Travis, the smart and sexy owner of her own butcher shop. Myers conquers his fears of commitment and takes the vow, "Until death do us part," not knowing the consequences of his actions. Commitment equals marriage and marriage equals death in this Tri-Star comedy featuring cameos by Steven Wright, Charles Grodin and SNL's Phil Hartman.

VIDEO

Scent of a Woman. Directed by Martin Brest. Chris O'Donnell is the timid prep-school student on the horns of a moral dilemma and stuck with a blind and bitter retired soldier for the weekend. Al Pacino took home an Academy Award for his portrayal of the suicidal aficionado who resolves his own emotional anguish and saves the day for O'Donnell as well.

MONDAY

9 Approximately 125 of MFA's finest watercolors are on display only until Aug. 15 in "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." They're truly amazing and epitomize the beauty of summer. Once the museum puts them away, you probably won't see them again for a long, long time.

TUESDAY

10 The Shenandoah Shakespeare Express presents Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, Romeo and Juliet, and A Midsummer Night's Dream in repertory. This young and lively company performs Shakespeare in an "all–stops–out, beautifully timed, and ultra physical" performance as described by the Washington Post. They'll be at the Boston Center for the Arts, located on Tremont St., Boston (between Berkeley and Claredon) from August 10 - 22.

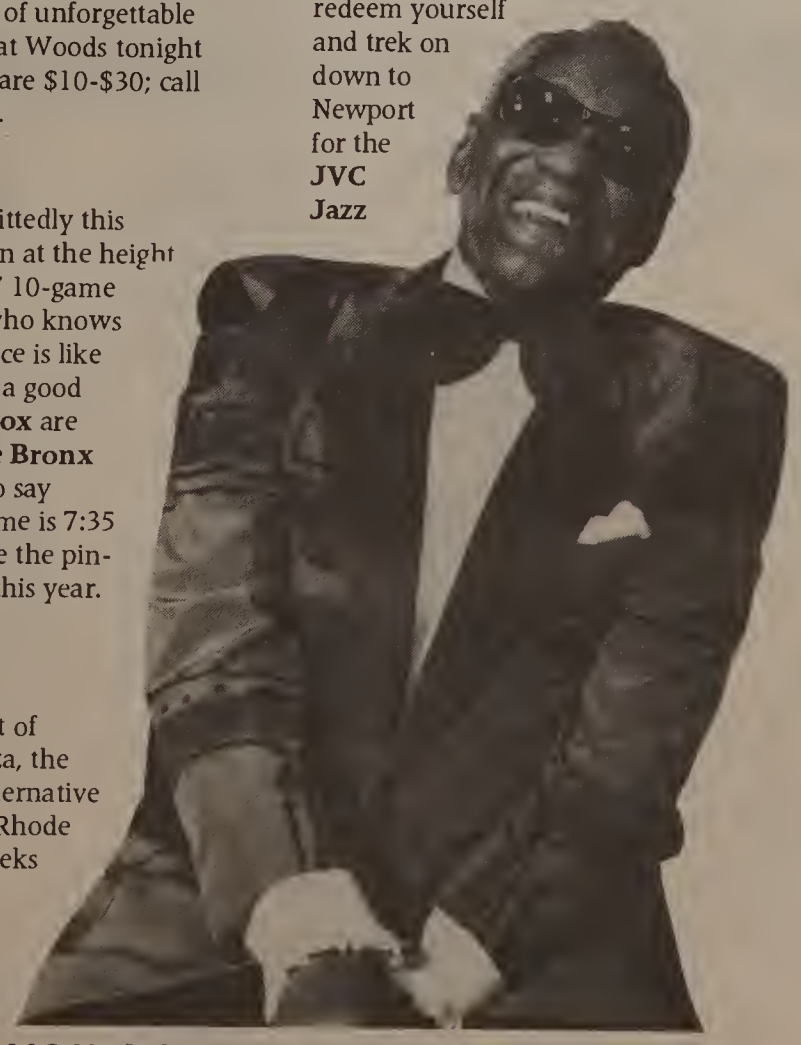
WEDNESDAY

11 Stars of the American Ballet, featuring principals of American Ballet Theatre and the NYC Ballet, will perform an evening of unforgettable ballet classics at Great Woods tonight at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $10-$30; call 931-2000 for tickets.

THURSDAY

12 Well, admittedly this was written at the height of the Sox' 10-game winning streak, so who knows what the pennant race is like now. But it's always a good game when the BoSox are matched up with the Bronx Bombers (it hurts to say "Yankees"). Game time is 7:35 p.m.; it's the last time the pinstripers will be here this year. Call 267-8661.

FRIDAY



13 In the spirit of Lollapalooza, the national alternative rock festival that hit Rhode Island a couple of weeks ago, the Museum of Science presents Lollapalaser every Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. It's a laser show set to the music of Pearl Jam, the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Fishbone, and many more.

FESTIVAL FOLKS
Peter Paul and Mary will appear at Ben & Jerry's Newport Folk Festival August 6 thru 8

SATURDAY

14 If you didn't make it down to the folk festival last weekend, redeem yourself and trek on down to Newport for the JVC Jazz Festival, Aug. 13-15. Headliners Aug. 13: The Count Basie Orchestra; Aug. 14: Ray Charles; Aug. 15: Tito Puente. call 931-200 for times and ticket prices.

YOU GOT THE RIGHT ONE!
Ray Charles, Appearing August 15 at the JVC Jazz Festival in Newport, R.I.

SUNDAY

15 One of America's favorite storytellers, Garrison Keillor (Lake Wobegon Days, Prairie Home Companion), performs Aug. 14 at 8 p.m. and today at 3 p.m. at Mechanics Hall, 321 Main St., Worcester. Also features the Hopeful Gospel Quartet. Call 641-1010 or 1-800-828-7080 for tickets.

MONDAY

16 Take a day off from the busy pace of the city and take a leisurely stroll around Walden Pond - it is Monday, for Pete's sake. You'd be surprised at what half an hour in the woods can do for your peace of mind (especially now that Don Henley's gone). It's off Route 2 in Concord.

TUESDAY

17 To whet your appetite for the Cirque du Soleil - coming in September, come see Le Cirque Invisible (that's "The Invisible Circus" for the completely language-deficient) from Aug. 17-Sept. 6 at 64 Brattle St. in Harvard Square. It's a mix of comedy, acrobatics, animal acts, magic and sheer theatricality. Call 547-8300 for times and tickets. Yes, we promise, you'll be able to see it.

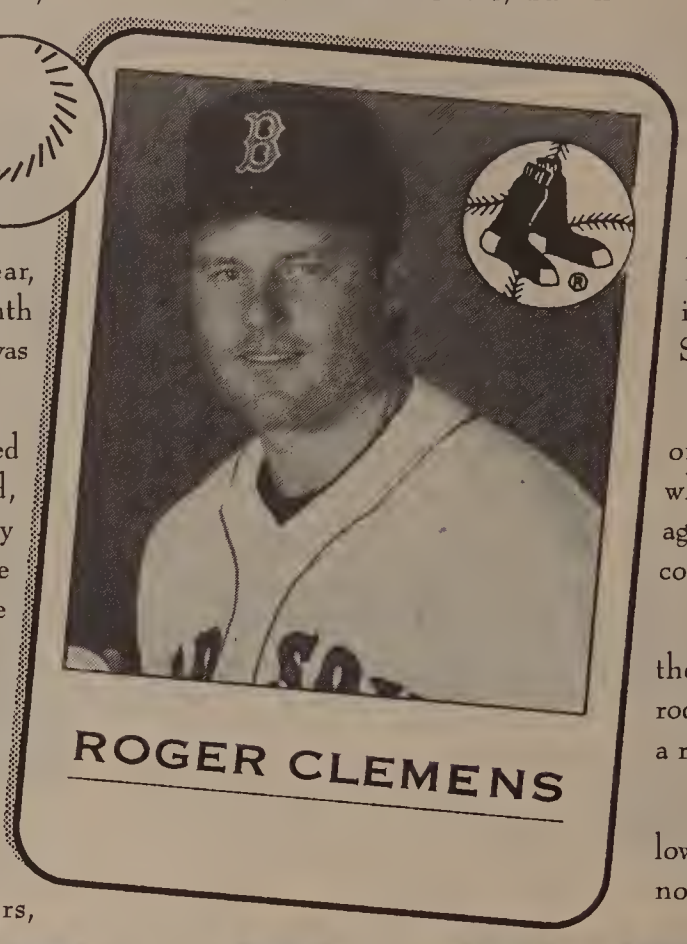
10 GAMES THAT SHOOK THE HUB

RED SOX FEVER!

By Christopher Francescani

"Red Sox fans have been living and dying with their favorites for three-quarters of a century. Big-league baseball may fluctuate sharply elsewhere, but not in Boston. Give a losing Red Sox team a three-game winning streak, and... Fenway Park will be mobbed for a week following. Give a Red Sox team a shot at the pennant, and Fenway Park, the most picturesque and one of the oldest and smallest baseball plants in either major league, will be mobbed for a year following."

——Al Hirschberg



In a recent Boston Globe opinion piece titled, "Put the field of dreams to pasture; hoops rules", columnist Tony Snow contends that baseball has worn out it's welcome on the playing field of national pastimes.

He believes that, "A great sport should require more than the ability to spit," and that baseball, "gobbles up nearly three hours per contest, most of which consists of pauses between pitches and innings, tobacco expectorations, crotch tugs and other adventures."

The article was published June 25, less than a week after Michael Jordan's Bulls, breaking records like twigs, captured their third straight NBA title. There is, admittedly, some truth to Snow's assertions. Basketball is fast supplanting baseball as the real national pastime, catapulted to national celebrity by Madison Avenue and Media-Hype, a two-pronged slingshot of image-making that could turn Pee Wee Herman into a poster boy for the Jesuits. Da Bulls, in conjunction with Gatorade, Nike, Reebok, Pepsi, Converse, McDonald's and Wheaties, to name a few, had for weeks commandeered the boob tube, turning everything from leather sneakers to leathery Whoppers into plugs for the National Basketball Association.

Snow further notes that baseball, "developed the tradition of the seventh inning stretch to arouse patrons from boredom-induced comas." In truth, the tradition developed after then-president Taft, at opening day in Washington one year, stood up to stretch during the seventh inning, and the crowd, thinking he was leaving, followed suit.

As the roar from Chicago faded and the hype eventually slackened, Beantown's gaze drifted inevitably towards baseball's Fenway Park, where time is tucked away somewhere beyond that confines of a nine-inning contest. The late-in-the-game urgency with which we conduct our daily lives, an urgency so reflective in pro baseball, is pleasantly absent at the ballpark.

ROGER CLEMENS

The view from the bleachers, however, was by no means a pretty one. The sign on the ticket window on Landsdowne Street could have read Field of Broken Dreams.

The Red Sox, on June 25th, were ten games out of first place, had lost six of their last ten contests, and were buffered from The Basement by the blessed ill fortunes of a stumbling Midwestern ballclub or two. Most of us had watched the baseball season unfold with the same rapt anticipation that we normally reserve for watching grass grow.

That was then, this is now.

The summer heat has moved in to grip the sweltering city in its fist, and we no longer thrive on pituitary types lurching down a ball court bathed in sweat. It's hot. And it's sticky.

Not only do we slow down during the summer months, but in turn we expect our pastimes to slow down with us. No more downtown-rebound-jumpshot-posthound circuit overloads in this heat. We prefer the in-my-own-sweet-time pitchers' poses and the long pop-fly shots that outfielders jog languidly towards and retrieve with no more effort than it takes to toss a Frisbee. In an age of global competition and MTV-style attention spans, the baseball season still seems a most welcome mental downshift.

Throughout the increasingly optimistic days of early July we rose and fell with the Olde Town Team's fortunes, applauding their victories, ever wary of the midsummer night's slump. Public displays of optimism in July are perennially considered naive in this city, and the prevailing opinion among veteran Red Sox watchers has been that the Sox could use a little starch.

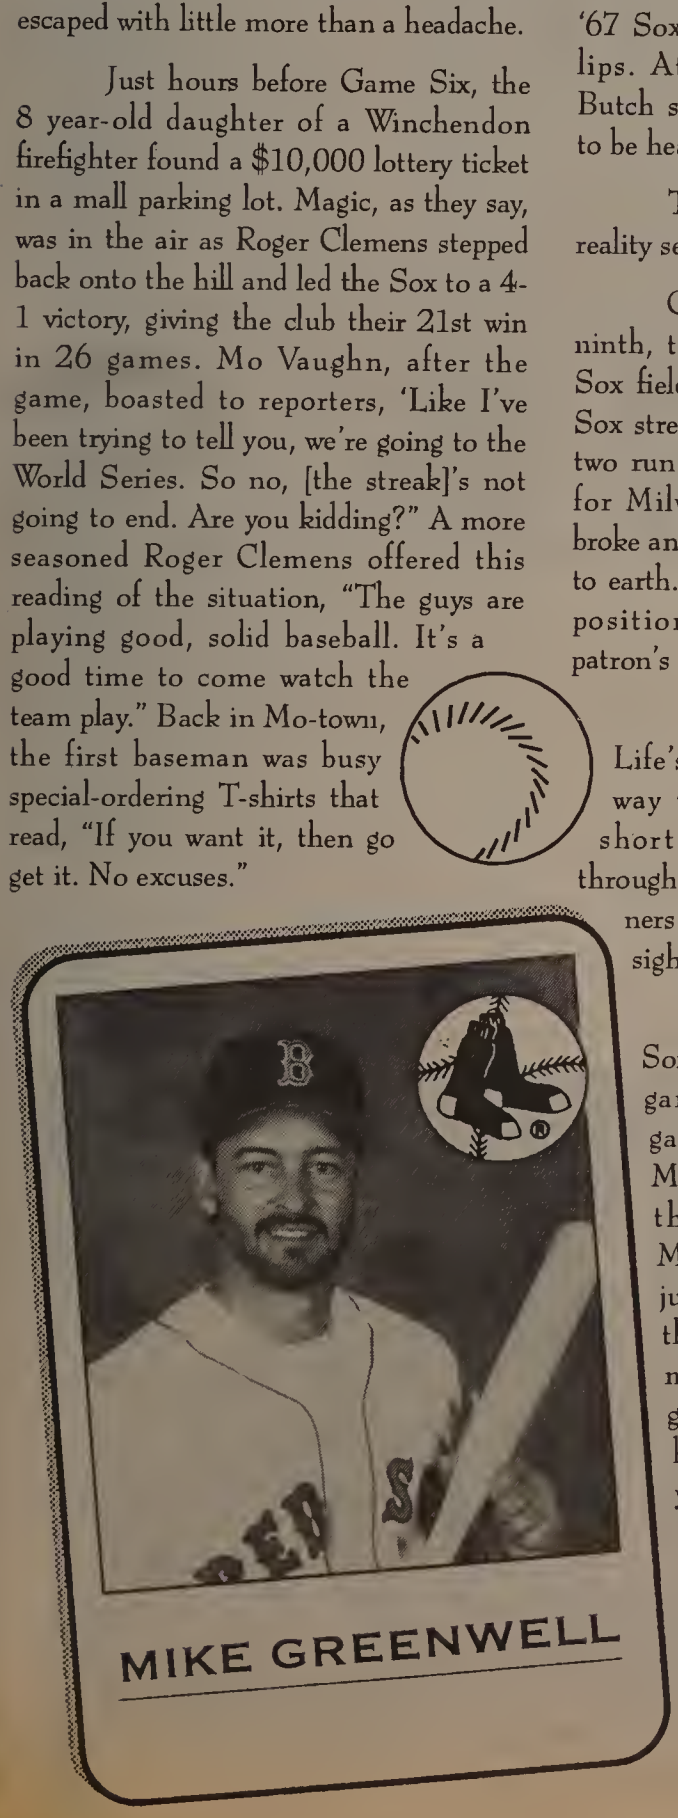
Then thunder struck.

And Rockets went off.

In his first major league start in four weeks, Roger Clemens struck out six, walked two, and allowed only one earned run in six innings as the Red Sox, gaining momentum following a successful road trip, defeated the Seattle Mariners 5-3.

What was to follow was ten days of unbridled Red Sox frenzy, during which the BoSox reminded us once again of the power of the pitch and its cooling effect on a simmering city.

The media, with little else to keep them busy in the heat of the summer, rode the moment like hapless children on a roller coaster.



Globe staple Mike Barnicle, following the Red Sox' ninth straight win, noted that, "There is no way to overestimate what good baseball means to this town and our region. When the club is competitive, striving, hustling, and unyielding in the face of defeat, people feel better about themselves and the life around them."

After Game Seven, the Herald's David Cataneo had this to say, "A month ago, the Red Sox played like pigs and the only good thing about summer was watching moths sizzle in the bug light. Now the days are sunny and dry and the nights are pleasant. You don't holler so much in traffic and you're even starting to use the directional signal now and then... The trees are green, all the women on the trolley look like Angie Dickenson circa 1965, a nice cigar hits the spot and you're sure Billy Martin wasn't such a bad guy after all."

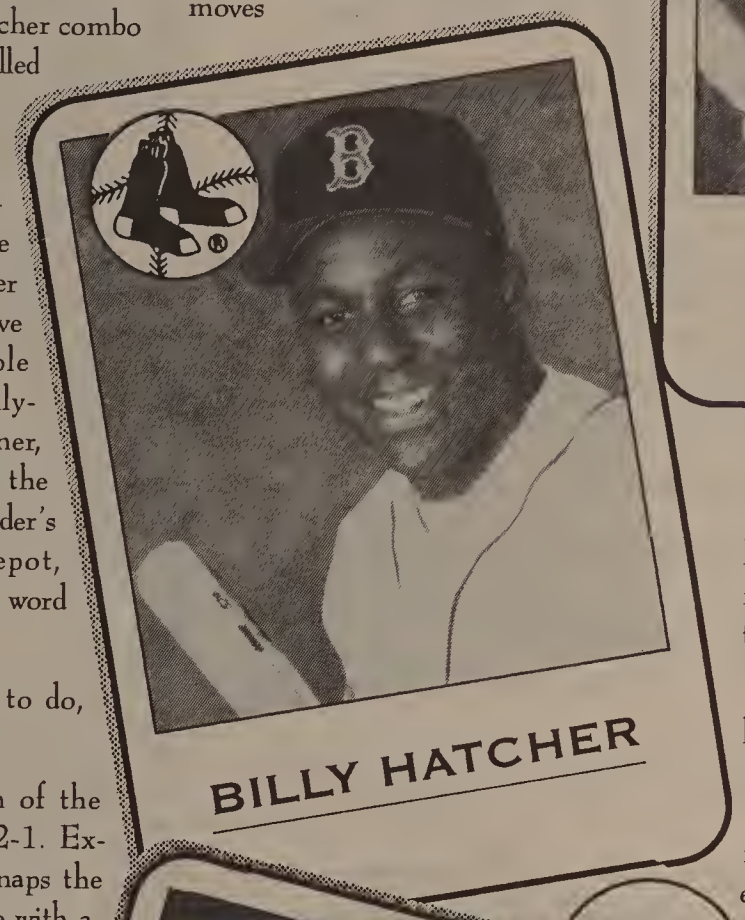
The Streak in July, as it has come to be known, was as momentous and dramatic as last call at Cheers. Cliff and Norm would have swiveled on their stools as, in the first inning of Game Three, Mike Greenwell was tagged in the head by a 94 mph fastball thrown by Seattle pitcher Randy Johnson, who one sportswriter called "the most frightening pitcher in the game even when he's not pitching." For a moment the park grew silent, recalling in horror August 18, 1967, when Sox slugger Tony Conigliaro was struck down by a fastball to the head that caused internal bleeding and derailed his career. Saved by an earflap, Greenwell escaped with little more than a headache.

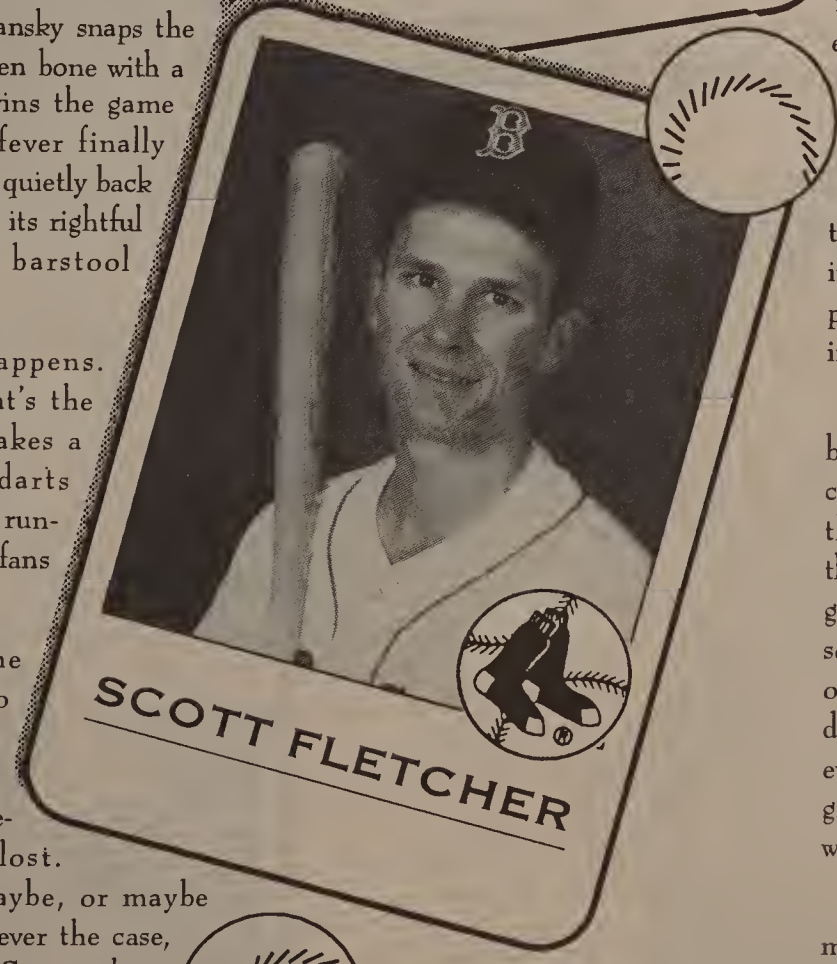
Just hours before Game Six, the 8 year-old daughter of a Winchendon firefighter found a $10,000 lottery ticket in a mall parking lot. Magic, as they say, was in the air as Roger Clemens stepped back onto the hill and led the Sox to a 4-1 victory, giving the club their 21st win in 26 games. Mo Vaughn, after the game, boasted to reporters, 'Like I've been trying to tell you, we're going to the World Series. So no, [the streak]'s not going to end. Are you kidding?" A more seasoned Roger Clemens offered this reading of the situation, "The guys are playing good, solid baseball. It's a good time to come watch the team play." Back in Mo-town, the first baseman was busy special-ordering T-shirts that read, "If you want it, then go get it. No excuses."

Late in Game Eight, the Sox, down 5-2 and probably a thousand faithless fans who had left the stands, Mike Greenwell smacked the potato into the right field bleachers to tie a game that the Sox went on to win in the 10th with a Zupcic-Green Monster-Hatcher combo that could only have been pulled off at Fenway Park.

By the time the planes at Logan were loaded with triumphant teammates en route to Milwaukee, Red Sox Fever had reached what would have been considered unchartable heights back in the typically-skeptical days of early summer, and cheerful comparisons to the '67 Sox were on every bartender's lips. At Allston Sports Depot, Butch supplanted beer as the word to be heard.



Then, as it has wont to do, reality set in.

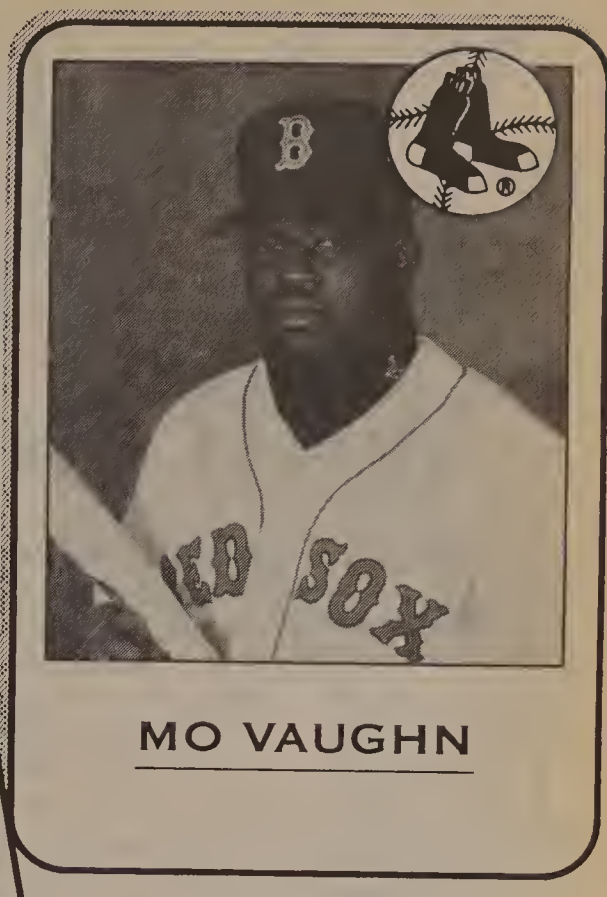


Game eleven: bottom of the ninth, two outs, Sox ahead 2-1. Ex-Sox fielder Tom Brunansky snaps the Sox streak like a chicken bone with a two run homer that wins the game for Milwaukee. The fever finally broke and we all drifted quietly back to earth. Beer assumed its rightful position on every barstool patron's tongue.

Hey, it happens. Life's a bitch. That's the way the ball.....takes a short hop and darts through the infield as runners score and the fans sigh helplessly.

While the Sox recovered two games of a four game series with Milwaukee, something was lost. Momentum maybe, or maybe just luck. Whatever the case, the Boston Red Sox, in their mad dash for immortality, gave this town one of the best July's it had seen in years.

As fans, we've been forced back into the one-day-at-a-time mentality of watching, waiting, and crossing the ever-hopeful fingers.



It's part of the game.

Like the economy, baseball moves at a slow, plodding pace and it's outcome is never certain. It can be tedious and often disappointing. But there is something dependable, inviolate about the sport. Baseball moves methodically through its motions: never very different, yet never the same. Through depressions and prosperity, war and peace, tragedy and triumph, baseball has remained constant.

The ten weeks that remain in the season stretch out endlessly before us, and the fate of the Olde Town Team is as mutable as a New England weather pattern. There is time to rise and fall endlessly with our team during the coming months, and that is the defining characteristic of the game: time.

Within the sheltering walls of the ballpark, time is captured, held still while the pitcher finds his stance or the batter seizes on just the right grip. Time never runs out on a ninth-inning rally, only energy deteriorates. The afternoon is measured in innings and outs, and the deceitful shadow of the sun, not a clock on the wall, is the player's constant nemesis. Despite the Astroturf, the enclosed stadiums and the skyrocketing salaries, the game exudes a purity, a pace, and a playability that you will find in no other game at any price.

Even if, in the time to come, baseball moves indoors and all the franchises are bought by Japanese investors, there will remain a constant rhythm to the game, a rhythm that our fathers and grandfathers felt, and a rhythm that our sons will someday feel. It is the rhythm of The Game, and no fastbreak, slam-dunk or sneaker ad in the world could ever be as energizing as game-winning grand slam in the bottom of the ninth with two outs and a loaded count.

So sit back and relax. It's summertime. Grab yourself a beer, expectorate some tobacco, and give a tug on that crotch. We have all the time in the world. This game isn't gonna go away.

Not to Miss

"... They Updated [Madame Butterfly] to the neon-lighted sleaze and opportunism of the Vietnam Era..."

Like the hurricane that could, in this season, bring welcome relief to our parched lawns, the mega-musical Miss Saigon has swept into the Wang Center to ease our theatrical drought. There's been plenty of publicity about the size of the production and the high-tech effects, but they all add up to a first-class endeavor, properly scaling a very personal love story set amidst the tumultuous exit of the American troops from Saigon.

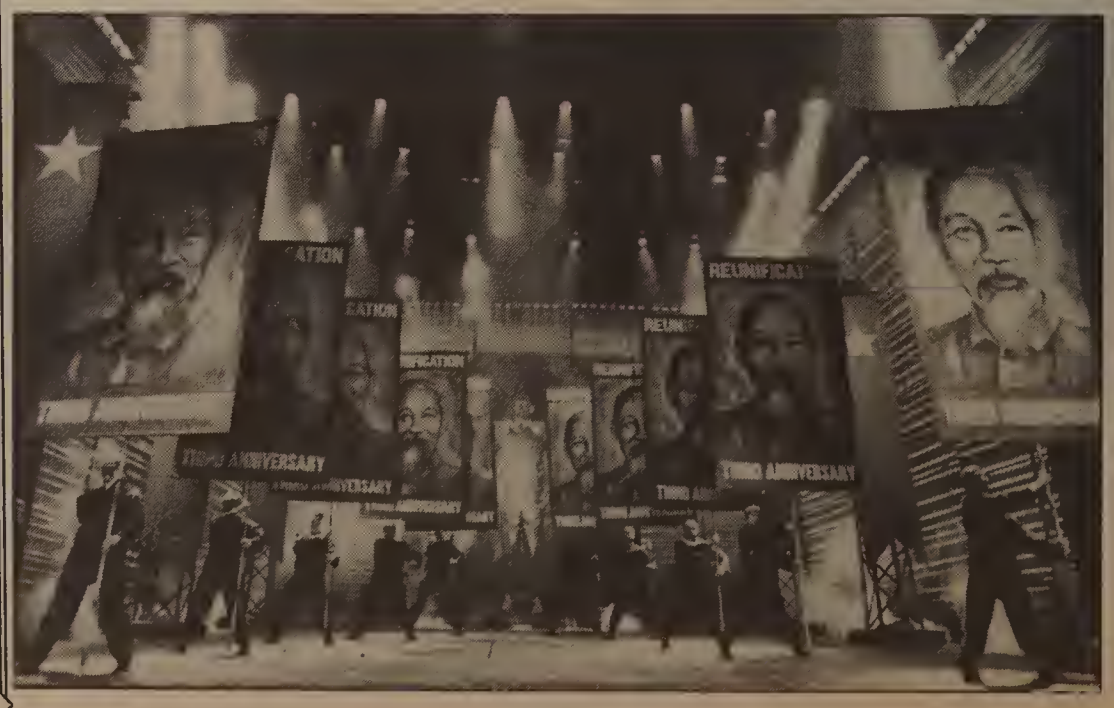
IF YOU GO

Miss Saigon

At the Wang Center for the Performing Arts
270 Tremont St.
Boston
July 14 through September 12.
Tickets available at the Wang Center Box Office or through Ticketmaster at 931-2222

The love story is an old one, adapted from Madame Butterfly by Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg – the creators of Les Misérables – with the assistance of Richard Maltby, Jr. They updated the tale to the neon-lighted sleaze and opportunism of the Vietnam era, and transformed it into a pop opera with an assertive, sung-through score. Though the narrative could unfold more expeditiously, and the evening is less riveting than their earlier creation, you forgive the comparative lags because of the keen theatrical sensibility driving the production. Drama and atmosphere – both aural and visual – are deftly combined into a grand and moving entertainment.

The story centers on Kim, a 17 year old Vietnamese orphan, who flees her war-ravaged village and despised fiancé to try her lot as a bar girl in Saigon. She meets Chris, an American soldier guarding the Embassy, and they quickly fall in love, only to be separated by the unexpected fall of the city in April 1975. When Chris returns three years later to Bangkok, where Kim and her pimp (known as The Engineer) have landed, he finds the dream of America still very much alive. Kim's protector/despoiler imagines a land of unlimited riches, deliciously captured in his show-stopping "The American Dream." Kim's agenda is more modest. She wants Chris to take their son to America. When she learns he is married, and that she cannot go along, she gives her life for this American dream.



Under Nicholas Hytner's focused, energetic direction, the large-scale effects, including a floating Cadillac and a whirring helicopter, are perfectly stitched into the theatrical tapestry. They're not stand-out dazzlers, so much as integral parts of a glossy whole.

Although some of the sounds are reminiscent of Les Misérables, the score is a splendid original, superbly enhancing the passion, danger, and conflict swirling around the foreign land. The voices are strong, and pleasingly handle the variety.

Most impressively, the personalities are not lost in the staging. Jennifer C. Paz brings a tender innocence and uncommon strength to Kim, while Jarrod Emick is a convincingly smitten Chris, and a convincingly torn husband whose dilemma is achingly real. Both love with quivering intensity.

Raul Aranas gleams with smarmy greed as The Engineer, and adds comic zest with his obsession ("I speak Uncle Ho, but I think Uncle Sam."). Keith Byron Kirk adds considerable moral presence as Chris' buddy John, whose stirring "Bui-Doi" movingly summons the Amer-Asian children left behind. Christiane Noll brings an appealing presence and strong voice to Chris' wife Ellen, and Allen Hong is surprisingly sympathetic as Thuy, the young man Kim's parents picked in peaceful times to be her husband.

Miss Saigon, endowed with sure-footed theatricality and a moving presence through all its high-tech splendor, is a most welcome storm in our midst.

Treasures of African and Oceanic Sculpture

"...The African objects dominate the exhibit by sheer force of numbers and also by their remarkable expressiveness..."

With the exception of the Getty Museum in California, most American museums grow by gift and not by purchase. Certainly the MFA owes its great collections (i.e. Nubia) primarily to donation or excavation. The Museum's new exhibition African and Oceanic Sculpture: Treasures from a Private Collection is thus doubly exciting because all 69 objects (42 African 27 Oceanic) will eventually become part of the permanent collection. Until now, holdings in the traditional arts of these cultures have consisted of exactly two African masks and four Polynesian objects. Judith Downes, Museum Designer, provides a magnificent setting for the show.

Yam Cult Head (Yina)

This individual collection stands out because it contains examples of private and public art from two unrelated cultures that nonetheless had similar artistic goals. Many miles separate Africa from Oceania, the umbrella term for thousands of islands in the Pacific, but almost every piece was intended to join the human and supernatural worlds. Using local materials and pigments, artists worked to make objects that would ensure the good will of powerful but temperamental spirits that affected their lives.

Oceania's lush environment is hardly benign, given tropical storms, volcanic eruptions, and tribal warfare. In fact, many of the smallest or most decorative objects are powerful reminders of Oceania's dark side. A lintel from Papua, New Guinea, depicts an illustrious ancestor flanked by four decapitated victims of his head-hunting raids. An ornate 14-foot pole, also from Papua, New Guinea, seems peaceful enough, but it actually commemorates tribal members killed by rival head-hunters. Even the Yam Cult Head , which represents the agricultural deity thought to control the yam harvest, is a 6-foot tall multi-colored mask.

The African objects dominate the exhibit by sheer force of numbers and also by their remarkable expressiveness. One striking example, a Power Figure, represents a tribesman, studded with nails and covered with white paint, whose stomach has become a receptacle for objects which attract favorable divine intervention. After each request, the petitioner drove a nail into the figure's shoulders. Other sculptures represent long-dead faithful royal retainers, their hands near their mouths to cloak their speech in the royal presence.

The African masks demonstrate the immense creativity possible within the confines of limited materials and a single artistic form. Priests or initiated members of elite groups donned the masks in order to assume the guise of a spirit whose aid they needed, and each artist approached his task in a completely different way. One mask, meant to represent a nature spirit, is actually a headdress in the shape of a large bird, while another depicts a nature spirit as a purely abstract form. Ancestor spirits were honored with masks adorned with elaborate "hairstyles" and shell decoration as in the Mask (Deangle) from the Ivory Coast. Were a community member an "evildoer," he might be greeted at night by an "enforcer" carrying a wooden club and wearing a mask with hideousl facial features.

Many of the African and Oceanic peoples valued the object more than the artist. With the exception of more modern pieces in the show, artists did not sign and date their work, nor did a written record survive. In fact, the art of some Oceanic cultures was never intended to last at all. In addition to destructive natural forces (i.e. wood-boring insects) outside influences have disrupted much traditional artistic activity and the belief system that supported it. Fortunately, this stellar exhibit provides the visitor a rare chance to see and admire the legacy of African and Oceanic cultures. ❑

ANOTHER STAKEOUT

The government wants her to testify. A notorious Chicago crime family wants her dead. Or is it the other way around? With a film this forgettable it hardly matters. When assistant D.A. Rosie O'Donnell sets up house with cops Richard Dreyfuss and Emilio Estevez in a stakeout to find the missing woman, the result is a lot of amusing bickering all-in-the-family style. Double agents, double takes, and double-entendres make up the plot of this muddled but ambitious gun-in-cheek crime story. With few real action/suspense scenes, the film relies heavily on the antics and banter of the mismatched trio, which are good but in the end, not enough.

CONEHEADS

Producer Lorne Michaels recruits almost the entire cast of Saturday Night Live for this extended comedy sketch. As with the NBC show, the scenes range from riotous to bland. After a crash landing, the Coneheads, Beldar (Dan Aykroyd) and Prymaat (Jane Curtin), make the best of suburbia among the "bluntskulls" in Paramus, NJ. Life is surprisingly human: they run the family business, face marital problems, and help their teenage daughter through school and dating. On Saturdays they relax and "consume mass quantities" at the backyard barbecue. Curiously, no one seems to mind their cone heads: the community accepts them as the ideal family. If only people in real life could be so open-minded.

Hotshot Harvard Law School grad Mitch McDeere (Tom Cruise) makes a deal with the devil and to extricate himself goes up against his new law firm, the Mafia, and the FBI. Director Sydney Pollack establishes character and motive with decisive sledgehammer blows, but there's little buildup and suspense. The movie aspires to literary heights but only succeeds at seeming pretentious. What lively moments it has are thanks to a motley assortment of quirky low-lives: Gary Busey as a good-natured private eye, Holly Hunter as a good-hearted tootsie; David Strathairn as Mitch's droll jailbird brother Ray, and Ed Harris as a bullying, hot-headed FBI agent.

Wolfgang Peterson directs this exciting, coherent , and often humorous action thriller starring Clint Eastwood as Secret Service Agent Frank Horrigan, a "borderline burnout with questionable social skills" who still feels guilty that he didn't protect JFK that day in Dallas. Frank gets a second chance compliments of rogue CIA operative and would-be-Presidential-assassin Mitch Leary (John Malkovich) who engages Frank in a game of cat and mouse. Renee Russo is good as career Secret Service Agent Lilly Raines and Frank's love interest. Almost over-the-hill Frank is less believable as Lily's love interest even if he does adore jazz, play the piano and grin disarmingly after making chauvinist remarks.

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts – and there are many – don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. The only entertaining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs running amuck in Jurassic Park and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill, and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

Virginia Woolf's Orlando, about the time-traveling adventures of a man who awakens transformed into a woman, is more engaging than its original readers would concede. Orlando the movie is empty, empty, despite the poetic passages and ethereal cinematography and the heaps of devotees who find Consequence and Importance just at the places where Woolf's readers found all style and no content. Potter can't direct and, worse for the high humor of Woolf's Orlando, she certainly can't direct comedy. On the other hand, Quentin Crisp, pioneering gay activist for The Naked Civil Servant, makes a prim and perfectly rouged Queen Elizabeth

Rookie of the Year is a kids' movie that's not just for kids. It's the fast-paced, funny story of 12 year old Henry Rowengartner (Thomas Ian Nicholas), who finds he can throw baseballs at 100 m.p.h. after his broken arm heals abnormally. He becomes a big hit when his mother's mercenary boyfriend signs him as pitcher with the Chicago Cubs. The film neatly combines childhood fantasy with adult reality. In his baseball dream world Henry contends with immense pressure to perform and jealous team members, such as over-the hill pitcher Chet Steadman (Gary Busey). Still, Henry has a ball, and so do we, even those of us who aren't avid baseball fans.

No trouble sleeping here. A young boy from Seattle, Jonah Baldwin (Ross Malinger), phones a radio talk show and says his widowed dad needs a new wife. A woman in Baltimore, Annie Reed (Meg Ryan), becomes obsessed with the young caller and his father Sam (Tom Hanks), and realizes that she and her fiance are mismatched. The premise is clever but the plot is rehashed. We get two hours of amusing, but all-too-familiar, "Will they (meet) or won't they?" Annie loses interest in her fiance because there are no surprises in their relationship. Ditto our reaction to this movie. Still, Hanks and Ryan are great. Maybe next time they could do two scenes together.

If you thought Weekend at Bernie's was funny, and think the sequel might be even funnier, think again. There are exactly three laughs in this otherwise vacuous "comedy." To get rich quick, Andrew McCarthy and Jonathan Silverman steal Bernie's corpse (Terry Kiser) from the morgue and bring it to the Virgin Islands in order to retrieve his safe deposit box full of cash. Everyone wants a piece: crooks, a shifty business mogul and even a voodoo priestess (who gives Bernie a little animation). The film moves too fast and little is substantiated. The characters are dull and idiotic. The most intelligent is Bernie – at least he knows when to sit still and shut up.

POETIC JUSTICE

The Girls in the Hood

At last. African-American movie heroines – smart city girls with dreams – are making names for themselves. There's Leola from Love Your Mama, Zora from Made in America ,and the wonderful Chantel from Just Another Girl on the I.R.T. Now meet Justice, heroine of Poetic Justice. Justice may be working-class, but she has all the advantages: she comes backed by a big studio, by hot young writer/director John Singleton, and by superstar Janet Jackson.

South Central L.A. to Oakland: Janet Jackson as Justice finds a world she never imagined.

Justice is a hairdresser in South-Central LA whose boyfriend is murdered in front of her. She copes with his death and earlier losses (she's an orphan) by withdrawing and writing poetry. Reluctantly, she sets off on a day-trip with her girlfriend Iesha (Regina King), Iesha's postal-worker boyfriend Chicago (Joe Torry), and his co-worker Lucky (Tupac Shakur). As they cruise up and back down the Pacific Coast in a U.S. Mail truck, Justice and Lucky fight, fight some more, and finally fall in love.

The film, which is a mishmash of coming-of-age in the 'hood movie, mini-road picture, and romance, has its share of fun, relaxed moments: bitch sessions at the beauty salon, Iesha and Chicago drinking and fooling around on top of the mail in the back of the truck, the four kids crashing and enjoying a friendly family picnic. But inevitably, the fun is marred by violence. At the picnic, Lucky observes that he has "never been around so many black folks where there wasn't a fight." Soon a fight breaks out.

Like Singleton's Boyz N the Hood, Poetic Justice is didactic. The director's moral convictions give his movies depth and complexity. Here Singleton is especially concerned with how urban African-American men and women interact. They fight. Constantly. Drugs fuel the fire, and as often as not, the violence escalates. Lucky gets into a brawl with his daughter's free-basing mother and her two boyfriends. Iesha, who's a nasty drunk, carries on about what a lousy lover Chicago is until finally he hits her. Singleton doesn't make excuses for his men, but his women are often instigators. Both must learn how to communicate and treat each other with respect.

We need not have worried about Janet Jackson. She is surprisingly relaxed and sympathetic. We root for her in a way we never do for Madonna because we fantasize that her choosing to play the unaffected, working-class Justice means that she's really not so different from the rest of us in spite of her $32 million record contract and her last name. (We enjoy Madonna's failures because she makes it clear that she wouldn't be caught dead being one of us.)

Any problems with her performance are problems with the movie. Starting with the title, Poetic Justice is often heavy-handed. Justice's big, emotional, revelatory scenes are dreadful; they come out of nowhere and evaporate. Justice is not a particularly well-developed or compelling heroine, which is a shame because she has our attention. Now if only she had more to say.

In a recent Boston Globe Magazine interview, Chris Rock said that when he does stand up comedy for a white audience he has to "do a sort of voice-over narration. You have to spell it out. A black audience, I just go for it." With Justice, Singleton apparently decided to go for it. In a Premiere interview he says he thinks some scenes might be foreign to white people. This white reviewer had trouble understanding the dialogue in a few of the early scenes. But here's hoping that Singleton continues to go for it and that next time, he gets there.

AMERICAN HEARTS

Also, Rock Hudson's Home Movies

With Singles and Sleepless in Seattle, the state of Washington's Nirvana capital went unabashedly Hollywood, and the picturesque Northwest city became synonymous with relationship-struck young yuppies crying into their Starbuck's cappuccino. American Heart, a low-budget independent feature, restores to cinema the Seattle of yore, as an off-beat, gritty setting, a disquieting place of rampant drugs, crime, prostitution, and screwed-up runaways spinning their wheels by the icy blue Pacific.

AMERICAN HEARTS:
Jeff Bridges, stringy-haired and tattooed.

Into this askew city comes Jack Kelson (Jeff Bridges), stringy-haired and tattooed, an ex-con looking for decent wages. If he can stay straight, save a few bucks, placate his grumpy parole officer, Jack hopes to ferry to Alaska by the summer. "There, nobody looks over your shoulder," he says, dreaming of the American Dream taking hold in snowed-in Fairbanks.

Meanwhile, Seattle sucks. The only job he secures is as a lowly window-washer. His ex-partner in crime, a cur named Rainey (Don Harvey), keeps slithering around, trying to pull Jack off track. Also, Jack is burdened with a round-the-clock conscience: his 15 year old son, Nick (Edward Furlong), has moved in with him and demands that the drifter/ex-jailbird shape up into real fatherhood.

Jeff Bridges is fine on screen, low-key, sincere, and unassuming, easy to root for as he tries to walk the straight line in Seattle. And there's something eternally potent in the motherless story of a wise-before-his-time boy attempting to domesticate his erratic, irresponsible dad. In movies, this kind of poignant tale goes back to Charlie Chaplin and Jackie Coogan in The Kid (1920) and Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper in The Champ (1931).

Disappointingly, American Hearts does so little with its set-up. For a long time, there's almost no plot, as if the way to be non-Hollywood is to choke off the narrative. So, the characters wait around. Then suddenly, there's too much plot, and a stupid one at that, as young Nick goes bad, rejects his father, and gets into crime himself. This turn-about then conveniently sets up the self-consciously anti-Hollywood Unhappy Ending. Also dumb.

Director Martin Bell has filmed in Seattle before, as co-maker of Streetwise, the popular 1983 feature documentary about teenage runaways. Its detractors accused the filmmakers of exploiting their vulnerable protagonists, whose seedy lives were dramatized in a raw, tabloid manner.

Though suspect, Streetwise maneuvered a fragile line between social consciousness and flagrant voyeurism. American Heart can be read only one way: as an unfortunate freak-show utilization of Seattle's unhappy street life. The runaways, addicts, homeless, and transvestites are rounded up and herded about as weirdo back-drop for the actors and drama. It's sheer exploitation, even if, as extras, the freaks were paid off.

Rock Hudson's Home Movies.

I recall a 1980 press conference in New York for the Agatha Christie thriller movie The Mirror Crack'd. A reporter showed off his hardboiled credentials by asking, embarrassingly, of Rock Hudson, "Isn't it true that you used to live with Jim Nabors?" Hudson gulped and turned white, and said "That's not true!" As always, he firmly denied his homosexuality. And he remained deep in the closet through his tragic AIDS-related illness and death.

Or at least, so we thought. But New York filmmaker Mark Rappaport shows in his sly and amusing Rock Hudson's Home Movies that the actor left clues all over the place about his gayness, for those who know how and where to look. Rappaport knowingly isolates moments from Hudson's much-underrated Hollywood movies and shows a pattern of gay double-entendres in the dialogue, oblique references to male lovers, moments of cross-dressing, and, most amazing of all, scene after scene of Hudson cruising his male co-stars. At one hilarious moment, Rock even puts the eye moves on John "the Duke" Wayne!

Comedy / Ross Garmil

Everyone's a Comedian

"Open Mic Nights & Throwing Yourself to the Comedic Lions at the Stitches Comedy Riot."

The Roman gladiators were trained professionals. They were well paid; they kept up on the latest spear tactics; they were provided with the best armor available, and they had a great dental plan. But how did these gladiators train to become professionals? Well, some were soldiers who did something special like ripping out a Carthaginian's arm from its socket without ruining a good manicure (on either the soldier or the severed arm). But others had to work their way up to gladiator status by surviving amateur nights at the coliseum. Unfortunately for many would-be gladiators, the amateur competition usually involved a large, outdoor stadium and many lions.

OPEN MIC NIGHT:
If you think you're funny...

And just like the gladiators of old, today's comedians have to hone their skills in the modern version of being thrown to the lions: open mic competitions. The premise of open mic is simple: if you think that you're funny and you can be funny in front of other people, then write your name down on a list and five minutes of stage time are yours.

In the heyday of stand-up comedy, would-be comedians could find a stage on which to perform every night of the week. However, in this recession less time is available to amateurs, but it is still out there. Both Stitches and Nick's Comedy Stop regularly feature large open mic competitions.

The idea of competition may scare off some first timers, but it shouldn't. And just to prove that point, this reporter, in his own magnanimous manner, threw himself to the proverbial lions and recently stepped onto his first open mic stage, in the preliminary competition of 9th Annual Stitches Comedy Riot.

While no awards were awarded and no network executives sought out my name and address to offer me my own late night talk show, I considered the performance a success. I walked onto stage and told some jokes. People laughed at the jokes. Not all of the jokes, but enough of them. I impersonated the T and gave tokens to the audience. They applauded. I left.

And now that I have some experience in the subject, I offer you, the would-be open miker, a short list of suggestions:

First of all, try not to ad-lib. While successful improvisation usually works very well, you will probably be too nervous to think quickly enough on your feet. Nothing looks worse than wasting your five minutes trying to think of something to say.

Meticulous preparation is key. Good material is necessary, but practice makes timing, and timing is everything. Practice wherever and whenever you can: in the shower, driving to work, shaving your dog, anywhere. If possible, tape yourself so you can time your act.

Write out a list of the routines you plan to perform, so that you can refer to it if you begin to forget what comes next. True it doesn't look very professional to look at your list on stage, but it is better than silence or uttering a cornucopia of "Er"'s, "Uh"'s, and "Where was I"'s. Besides, you shouldn't worry about not looking professional; after all, you're not.

One last tip, if you seem to have sweaty palms, be careful around the microphone wire. After all, who wants to end up like a would-be gladiator? ❑

That Big Apartment Look

Interior design tricks to make your place seem spacious

Ah, your very own apartment. You've gotta love it. Well, most of it anyway. You could do without the clumps of green mohair growing on your bathroom ceiling, the tan-corduroy wallpaper, the leaking fridge, musty carpet, broken plaster, flickering light bulbs, tap water that runs green-brown-green (on good days), cabinet doors that just won't open, a bathroom door that just won't close, and a rusted old heater that screeches almost as loudly as your 300-pound next-door neighbor snores. Almost.

But what really bothers you about your apartment is its size: it's so darn small. Not cute. Not cozy. Small. Borderline claustrophobic. And without "Megabucks" or a long-lost, rich Uncle Louie, you'll probably be stuck in it for awhile anyway.

Well, although I can't promise you Instant Palatial Suite (if I could I certainly wouldn't be working on a newspaper column at 4:00 in the morning), I will say that the following interior design tricks might just forge you the extra space and spaciousness you need to get by. (Though I wouldn't stop leaving messages for Uncle Louie.)

MIRRORS. In Mary Gilliatt's 58th-or-so design book, Shortcuts to Great Decorating (Little, Brown, and Co., 1991), she insists that "Of all the illusory devices used to open up small spaces, the most dramatic and versatile is [the] mirror." She recommends placing mirror panels in between windows to achieve the effect of an entire wall of windows, or even running a mirror the entire length of the wall – floor to ceiling – which gives the impression of doubling your actual space. If you're on a tight budget, you can substitute standard, mirrored tiles for the sometimes-pricey mirror paneling. If you're on an even tighter budget, you can move back in with your parents.

COOL, LIGHT COLORS. In the world of interior decorating, colors have lives of their own, often more interesting than the lives of the columnists who write about them. Cool, light colors, for example, have the power to create space, according to Pamela Glossman-Smith, owner of Design Creations, Inc. in Boston. (In case you were busy eating paste while Mrs. Libby went over the Big Color Chart Poster in second grade, "cool colors" are blues, greens, violets, grays, and neutrals: light-beige, off-white.)

ESSENTIAL FURNITURE ONLY. Keep only what you need, not what you can get your hands on. This seems obvious, but you'd be surprised at how many people dwarf their apartment because Aunt Edna has finally croaked and left you her treasured antique hutch. "Less is more," says Pamela.

Seemingly Obvious Furniture Tip #2: if your apartment's ceiling is eight feet high, don't buy a kitchen table that's seven feet high because (1) you won't be able to see your food, and (2) oversized furniture makes the rest of your apartment look like the tiny little linen closet that it is.

TABLES. Barbara Bradford, whose syndicated column "Designing Women" won four awards for excellence in design reporting, prefers glass-and-steel tables because their see-through quality creates even more "optical space" (defined as "space that is optical") (further defined as "space that you can't store anything in because it is only apparent to the eye, which is currently using all of the available optical space for storage).

WINDOW TREATMENTS. "Treat your window well, and it will treat you well," said nobody because "Window Treatments" is decoratorese for the "Stuff Around Your Windows." Your goal as a budding decorator (you're a budding decorator) is to let this "Stuff" blend harmoniously with your walls, according to Pamela. Or, better yet, have no curtains at all. Pamela suggests using sheer blinds (the ones you can see out of but people can't see into).

LIGHTING. Illumination on back walls and hallways carries the vision of someone entering the apartment through the depth of your apartment. The illusion of depth can be achieved through track or recessed lighting, wall washers, or even, says Pamela, through the use of an inexpensive spotlight set on the floor and directed onto corner plants or artwork.

Follow these helpful hints to create the illusion of more space in that closet you call an apartment. Or not. Remember, this column is pressure-free.

Boston's Best Buys

Of Travelbugs, Boomerangs and Crocodiles

If you've always had a hankering to visit Australia and New Zealand, this is a "best buy" you'll want to consider. Departing on October 31, 1993, for a song – and a check of $4,999 – you'll have a guaranteed great adventure with Carol Nashe, international traveler, and strategist for the National Association of Radio Talkshow Hosts. The moments I've shared with Carol have always been hilarious, touching, fattening, and contagious (you can't stop traveling with her!). Photo buffs prepare to snap Ayers Rock, Great Barrier Reef, Sydney Opera House, Waitomo Glow worm Grotto, Mount Cook and Milford Sound. The trip from LA. to Cairns via Quantas means you only lose a day, and Australia is a photographer's dream. New Zealand brings us to Christchurch and Queenstown with an optional ski-plane flight landing you on a glacier. After all, it is spring! We'll visit Kiwi farms, sheep shearings and view Lake Wakatipu from a coal-burning steamer and feast on an Aussie Bush Smoko. If 18 days aren't enough or you need some unwinding, add an optional trip to Fiji for three days; you can watch the firewalkers, fish, swim and boat to your heart's content. G'Day Mates!

Hair With a Heart

Avanti, a trendy Newbury Street salon, is offering one free haircut to anyone who is a healthcare provider for AIDS patients. Mandatory identification is required for this service. Considered a "Best Bet" by Glamour magazine (January '93) for its innovation in "contract" haircuts, Avanti Salon has a futuristic marketing approach to simplifying your salon needs. Owner Sally Drinkwater suggests that you contract with your stylist or color specialist for an agreed-upon period of time. You pay for the service up front, allowing you a 15% discount. Appointments are booked as usual. Another innovation from this forward-thinking salon is the extraordinary added value in the form of free consultations. As "image makers," the specialists at Avanti will consult on your personal image and then make recommendations accordingly. Sally suggests that this team of specialists is a terrific asset in developing your own personal style. As "color doctors," Avanti specializes in colors, perms, conditioning, and stress relief head massage. Cuts range from $28-$75, Color, $40 and up for one process and foils starting at $100. Perms and straightenings are $70, and conditioning treatments are $20. Salon hours are Mon.-Fri. 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Sat. 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Sittin' or Snoozin'

For great prices on bedding and futons, SLEEP-A-RAMA is the place to go, especially for the month of August. Their styles of futons are diverse and attractive, and include oak, mahogany and metal, from American arts and crafts to very contemporary. There is also a selection of mechanisms. The tri-fold has a portion of the mattress which will hang over the back of the futon in the sofa position, and the bi-fold has a regular double mattress that retains the futon/sofa look until it's positioned as a bed. From chairs that serve as twin beds to sofas folding out as big as queensize, these items ranging from $99 to $499 include free futon covers of your choice (about 25 colors and patterns) for two weeks in August. At over 20 available locations, call Cathy or Marc in Boston for the locale nearest you. Free lay-a-way. Phone orders accepted.

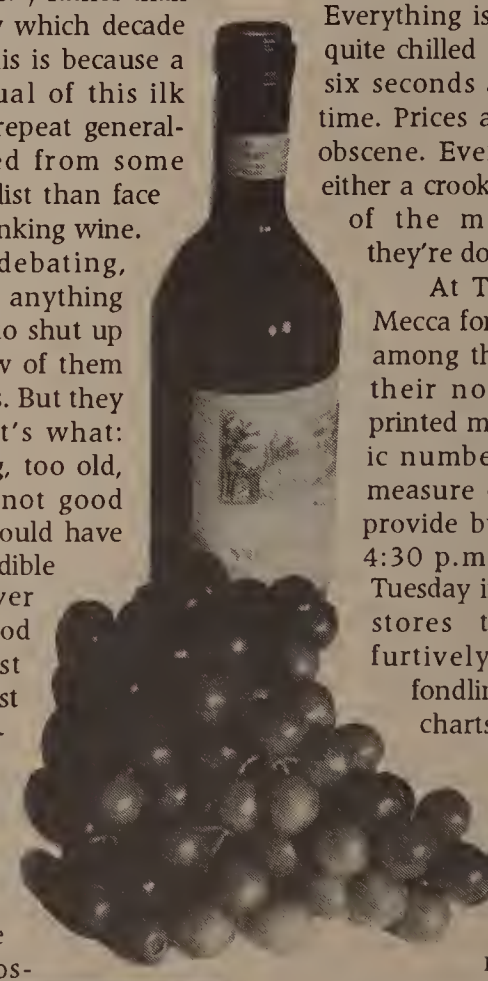
Calling All Wine Bores

"...Collecting, tasting, debating, sneering, browbeating, anything is preferable to having to shut up and enjoy a bottle..."

For the Wine Bore, "Collecting, tasting, debating, sneering, browbeating, anything is preferable to having to shut up and enjoy a bottle."



An ability to recognize the world-class Wine Bore for what he is and to understand his peculiar predatory manners of speech and behavior are most rewarding skills. They will save you time and money. To the untrained eye, though, an authentic wine lover is not easily distinguishable from one of these joyless bullies in disguise.

One unerring clue is the frequency with which you hear the word "vintage" cropping up in conversation. Extravagant pronouncements abound. The true certified snob is noted for abbreviating the year (e.g., "No question at all, the three's were far superior to the two's.") rather than even stooping to clarify which decade is under discussion. This is because a cutting edge individual of this ilk would actually rather repeat generalizations he has culled from some equally clueless journalist than face the daunting task of drinking wine. Collecting, tasting, debating, sneering, browbeating, anything is preferable to having to shut up and enjoy a bottle. Few of them actually own corkscrews. But they definitely know what's what: everything's too young, too old, the most, the worst, not good enough, almost good, could have been better, more incredible than anything you ever heard of, almost as good as something I almost had, or just plain the best ever, period, exclamation point.

Scratch one of these creatures and what you really find is a true believer, a fanatical devotee of some guru or other who possesses secret mystical information you can receive in the form of an advisory newsletter. The Bore, it turns out, is a born sucker. Most of the big talk is a self-aggrandizing rehash of The Word according to some other complete loser with a snappy sales pitch.

How to spot one of these birds in their natural habitat:

At The Restaurant. They're itching, they're ready to go, they walk in loaded with attitude. They take forever to order because nothing is good enough. The wine list is slammed shut dramatically and then opened again. Shut and open, open and shut. There is a sense of outrage because the 1991 Chenin Blanc is no longer available. Why do you carry this and not that, they ask. Sighs. Lectures. Incessant demands for irrelevant information. Everything is either too cold or not quite chilled enough, or was opened six seconds after the precise right time. Prices are never high, they're obscene. Every restaurant owner is either a crook or a moron. And none of the managers know what they're doing either.

At The Store. A veritable Mecca for wine bores eager to be among their own flock. Usually their nose is buried in some printed material with hieroglyphic numbers detailing the exact measure of ecstasy a bottle will provide but only if consumed at 4:30 p.m. on a sunny but dry Tuesday in 1997. In high-volume stores they're tight-lipped, furtively investigating prices, fondling labels and examining charts and the like. In more sedate shops, their baritone voices boom out instructions, orders, lame jokes. The bore on center stage relates an endless stream of pointless anecdotes that may or may not have actually happened to somebody else. Nothing is ever a good value, everything's a steal.

At The Party. If you begin to overhear words like "Chard" or "Cab" you're getting warm. You will soon be bombarded with details of visits to wine country, exclusive audiences with chateau owners, and the inside dope on next year's vintage, all without asking. Perhaps a color snapshot of a cellar in mid-construction will be passed around for approval. Don't even try and walk away, it only encourages them.

In The Wine Column. Either the ultimate authority or a semi-literate malcontent with nary a good word to say about anything but his own precious palate.

APPETEASERS

"... Some Table Talk, and Farm Fresh Juicy Details..."

ONE NIGHT STAN

Stan Frankenthaler, formerly of the Blue Room, is spending Thursday night, August 5th, at Daddy-O's restaurant in Cambridge. Stan thought it would be fun to join chef/owners Ellis Seidman and Paul Sussman in the kitchen and whip up some of his signature dishes. He is currently planning the opening of his own new restaurant, Salamander. Some of the special items being prepared for this one night engagement are Filipino pork, shrimp and tofu fritters with a garlicky dipping sauce; and braised, then grilled, thick-cut short ribs. Many of Daddy-O's old standards will also be available with a new spin. Dinner hours are from 5-10 p.m. The restaurant usually has a no-reservation policy, but for this special night reservations are recommended. Daddy-O's: 354-8371.

TABLE TALK

Caffe Appassionato, the Seattle-based coffee bar chain, is opening their first Boston area coffee bar on Walnut Street in Newton. They hope to expand further into the Boston market soon. Look out Coffee Connection! Bobby Church of Roberto's fame is setting up on Hanover Street in the North End. The new restaurant will be called Roberto's Again. The Four Seas restaurant on Tyler Street will be re-opening soon. It has long been regarded as one of the best Chinese restaurants in Chinatown.

Marino's Restaurant will open Caffe Marino this fall in the renovated Holyoke Center in Cambridge. They are the first major restaurant to sign a lease. On a sad note, the Downtown Cafe on Washington Street has closed. This Combat Zone institution had a cult following and was also famous for the Boston Disaster tour led by owner Dan Holmes. We have heard that Dan is on his way to Italy, hopefully not on the Andrea Dorea. Jose McIntyre's opened this week at 160 Milk Street, downtown. Under the direction of Danny Weisel, the restaurant will offer Mexican/Southwestern cuisine.

RUMOR HAS IT

Rumor has it that Pat Lyons is behind the on-going renovation in the former Restaurant Genji on upper Newbury Street. The name of the new restaurant will be Tango or Brazilia (rumor, of course). The new chef will be Bill Poirier, currently sous-chef at Biba. Look for a funky atmosphere and food priced under $25 a person for dinner. Say no more.

FARM FRESH

If you're looking for produce fresh from the farm, stroll over to the farmer's market in Copley Square. On the day of our visit, Hickin's Farm had raspberry and blackberry cakes and pies along with an amazing selection of red, black, purple, and yellow raspberries. Oasis Farm offered a gourmet mushroom called the white trumpet mushroom that looked as if it would go well with almost any dish. Other vendors had beautiful red tomatoes, summer and zucchini squash, baby carrots, and wax beans. If food is not what you're after, there was also a selection of cut flowers as well as a table of miniature roses. The market operates on Tuesdays and Fridays from 11 a.m.-6 p.m. and is located on the Copley Plaza side of the park in front of Trinity church. Try to go early because the vendors sometimes sell out before closing time.

JUICY DETAILS

If you couldn't squeeze into the standing-room-only crowd at Biba's bar last Thursday, it was because Kam Flanders was having a birthday party. The highlight of the evening was the arrival of the birthday cake topped with a Barbie doll. Look for Cornucopia's Elaine Speer and her chocolate truffle terrine with mango sauce in the August/September issue of Chocolatier magazine. It's enough to make one run to the wharf for a bite. "Get well" wishes to Lydia Shire as she recovers from pneumonia. The return of the Great Yankee Rib Cookoff will be August 25-29 in City Hall Plaza. The event will feature ribs and fixin's from around the country. More details soon. Michael Rugnetta is now creating desserts on-premise at Fresh Louie's Market on Newbury Street. Mike's bittersweet chocolate torte is our favorite. The store is also selling delicious bread from Olives. The selection includes focaccia, Tuscan bread, olive loaf, and black currant bread. ❑

Dining Review / Ed and Ruth Feldman

The Rowes Wharf Bar

". . . The house specialty of chicken pot pie was a must try and lived up to its claim. . . ."

Tucked into the corner of the majestic Boston Harbor Hotel lies one of the best secrets in Boston; The Rowes Wharf Bar. The club-like atmosphere is cozy and inviting with richly hued wood panels and forest green upholstery. The stately furniture, sofas and chairs all add to the continental flair.

The fully stocked bar seats about twelve. Beers on draught are impressive ($4) and include local favorites such as Sam Adams and Boston Ale as well as Pete's Wicked Ale from the West Coast and Bass & Guiness imports. Not a bad start....

Lunch is served from 11:30 to 4:00 and offers a little bit of everything. Listed under Light Fare were three salad selections. Traditional Caesar ($7.50), which we found good but with not quite enough zing. The Crab, Cod and Salmon Cakes on mixed greens ($10.50) was delicious. A careful presentation of mixed baby greens, matchstick cucumbers, paper thin slices of onion and baby plum tomatoes. Three individual seafood cakes were delicious with tender chunks throughout and a delicate golden brown. The accompanying sauce was listed as tomato caper but tasted a bit too much like Heinz.

The House Specialty of Chicken Pot Pie ($11) was a must try and lived up to it's claim. Served in a large crockery bowl, the plentiful dish was topped with a cloud of puff pastry. The stew itself was very good and consisted of hearty chunks of white meat chicken, potatoes, carrots, and peas. A thick, rich gravy engulfed the whole mixture. A true pot pie.

Selections from the Carvery are available for $10.00 or in combination with soup or salad for $8. We sampled the open faced pastrami with pickled cabbage and were very pleased with the portion and quality.

On the Supper menu the clam chowder($3.50), Romaine, Radicchio and Pepper Salad with shaved Parmesan & Creamy Balsamic Dressing ($7.50) and the Grilled Cheeseburger ($8.50) are all delicious.

Dessert offerings (at $3.75) are fresh berries or pastry of the day. On our visit the berries were beautiful raspberries, blackberries, blueberries and strawberries.

A colossal pint of berries was served with a separate dish of cream. Reluctantly, the German Chocolate Tart was ordered. Not usually our favorite pick, we were reminded of why Chef Daniel Bruce has a reputation for exquisite desserts. The individual tart shell was a work of art; the bottom layer a rich, dense swirl of semi sweet chocolate. Next, a scoop of the chocolate, walnut & coconut mousse and then topped with whipped cream and a chocolate decoration.

Unfortunately the coffee ($2.25) was served tepid and was not the best impression to have as our last. However; we continue to enjoy the solitude, excellent service and ambiance of this fine bar & cafe.

The Sound View / Paul Robicheau

The Summer Sound View

Singular Summer Concert Attractions

So you missed Lollapalooza? Don't sweat it – unless you like hanging out on a vast vacant lot with clueless-looking teens and twenty-somethings who are into bodysurfing as much as the music. There are plenty of other great multi-band concert bills this summer, to please a variety of tastes.

For starters, there's H.O.R.D.E. (that's Horizons of Rock Developing Everywhere), the "neo-hippie" alternative to Lollapalooza. The Aug. 7 line-up at Great Woods includes Blues Traveler, Widespread Panic, Col. Bruce Hampton & the Aquarium Rescue Unit (as crazy as they sound; get there by 3 p.m. or you'll miss 'em), the Samples and Big Head Todd & the Monsters. It's a wide-ranging bill of bands into the organic spontaneity of live music pioneered by the Grateful Dead and Allman Brothers Band.

"It's for the same fans," says John Popper, the Blues Traveler vocal-harmonica ace who coined the H.O.R.D.E acronym, from a recent tour-stop. "If you've heard of this band and that band, it's a chance to go see 'em, and see their fans, and all hook up."

If folk is more your cup of tea, there's the expanded Ben & Jerry's Newport Folk Festival that same weekend. Highlights on the Aug. 7 schedule include John Prine, sweet-voiced Tish Hinojosa, Mary-Chapin Carpenter, Daniel Lanois and John Gorka. Carpenter will join the Indigo Girls and Joan Baez for Four Voices in Harmony the next day, which will also feature Nanci Griffith, Alison Krauss & Union Station and slide guitar whiz Sonny Landreth.

Both days of the folk festival run 11:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. at Fort Adams State Park, while Sweet Honey in the Rock celebrate Friday night and the Bottom Line holds a "In Their Own Words" showcase (with five songwriters including Zachard Richard and Sarah McLachlan) Saturday night at the Newport Islander Hotel.

For the blues fan, you won't find a more explosive bill than the one at Great Woods Aug. 8, especially if you love guitar. Veterans B.B. King and firebrand Buddy Guy (an idol for Eric Clapton and the late Stevie Ray Vaughan) are joined by Texas' sleek-flying Eric Johnson (actually more rock than blues) and the Alligator All-Stars: Lonnie Brooks, Junior Wells and Koko Taylor, the QUEEN of the blues.

When it comes to jazz, a trip back to Newport is in order for the JVC Jazz Festival. On Aug. 14, mainstream idols Ray Charles and Grover Washington will follow the heat of the John Scofield Band, rising sax star Joshua Redman's quartet and piano buzzer Michel Camilo's "Original Trio." Aug. 15 has more heavyweights with aging timbales titan Tito Puente, sultry Nina Simone and tenor master Sonny Rollins, as well as the sunny Spyrogyra and host George Wein's All-Stars. Again, each day runs11:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. at Fort Adams State Park.

For rock, the summer's best triple bill is Aug. 17 at Great Woods. Any show with Midnight Oil – the Aussies whose musicianship is even fiercer than their PC stance – is worth seeing, especially when shaven-headed singer Peter Garrett starts careening to the music like a spastic Frankenstein. But the Oils are touring with Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers (now veterans at tastefully blending pop and reggae) and Hothouse Flowers, one of Ireland's best live bands, deserving more attention for their new album "Songs From the Rain." If you like rock that's spiritual and spirited, this is your night.

ELSEWHERE: If you need other, singular concert attractions, remember the Who's Pete Townshend on his first solo tour Aug. 9 and the Allman Brothers Band Aug. 15, both at Great Woods. ❑

Freelance writer/photographer Paul Robicheau has covered music for more than a decade. He is a Boston correspondent for Rolling Stone magazine and his features and reviews appear regularly in the Boston Globe.

German Baroque Masters and the Boston Scene

Whatever the drawbacks of Boston – for example, Revere – we can at least breathe a sigh of relief that our many resident early music groups continue to produce suave and enjoyable performances of great ancient works. Whatever the music, whatever the instruments, Boston performers seem to favor a lucid, stylish tone, happily avoiding that high-pitched, off-key, early music whine that always compels us to open wide instinctively and mumble excuses about flossing. In the last few months, there have been two recordings notable for this sophistication of style: the Boston Baroque's performance of Bach's last three Brandenburg Concerti (Telarc 80354), and the Chorus of Emmanuel Music's second disc of Heinrich Schuetz's choral works (Koch 3-7174-2).

Martin Perlman and his Boston Baroque always provide us with brisk, intelligent performances, and this new recording is no exception. While a silvery, even patrician, tone does mean that Perlman's performances of Bach's masterworks are less vividly aggressive than some other original instrument performances (for example, the Pinnock on DG), it does also ensure that during the slower, more contemplative movements there are no nasty yowling sounds.

This disc is a perfect introduction for those who are interested in hearing a familiar major work on period instruments. Particularly interesting is Perlman's decision to perform the 6th Brandenburg Concerto with only one instrument to a part, instead of the participation of the whole orchestra. The results are very fine indeed. You feel like you're sitting in on an impassioned discussion between friends, and not necessarily German friends. The lower strings, heroic throughout the recording, shape their solos perfectly in the Sixth. Though some might miss the primitive, thrumming orchestral bass which can make the opening movement so wonderfully savage, the soloists' sense of commitment and unity makes a new and completely captivating case for the music. Also not to be missed is Perlman's own performance of the flamboyant harpsichord cadenza in the Fifth: baroque in every sense of the word.

The Chorus of Emmanuel Music has just recently released a similarly polished performance of church music by German Baroque composer Heinrich Schuetz. This follows the almost bizarre success of a similar release last year (Koch 3-7085-2); at the time, rave reviews coincided with a tricky shipping problem, and hardly any copies of the disc were to be found in Boston. Lack of supply created demand. In no time, people who had never in their lives heard of Heinrich Schuetz were writhing on the floor of Briggs and Brigs, moaning with longing and tearing up the linoleum. The CD achieved international recognition, and Koch made the laudable decision to release this Volume II.

So who in fact was Heinrich Schuetz? He was an early Baroque composer who studied under the greatest masters in Italy, then returned to his native Germany to synthesize his own Protestant version of their styles. He led a reasonably dismal life – as did everyone before the advent of credit cards and Soap-On-A-Rope – but seems to have responded with a particularly Lutheran sense of faith and hope. Things weren't easy. He suffered through the Thirty Year's War – disorienting not just in that it was extremely petty and violent, but also in that it didn't last thirty years – and his wife died before him. In his surviving letters, he complains that his choristers are variously drunk, underpaid, or dead.

Though Emmanuel Music's recordings of these works are not the most dramatic and intense you'll ever hear, they may well be the most beautiful. Whereas German choirs and their imitators tend to project a kind of unruly, declamatory energy into these pieces, Craig Smith and Emmanuel music instead find in them a luminous serenity. This smooth, crystalline sound fits the works on this new disc – largely devoted to woks for Christmas and Advent – somewhat better than it did the more tortured Passion Week motets on their previous release. This is a disc to remember for the holiday season, and we look forward to hearing more on disc from both groups. ❑

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

GENERAL

BEACON HILL PUB
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

CACTUS CLUB
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, induding Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

THE LITTLEST BAR
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

MARKET PLACE CAFE
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m.. "Street Magic" A cappella every Wednesday at 8:30. Casual atmosphere and dress.

PROVINCE STREET PUB
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

THREE CHEERS RESTAURANT & BAR
290 Congress St., 423-6166
Located on Boston's scenic waterfront overlooking the historic Boston Tea Party Ship. Featuring Kareoke, comedy great music and more! When looking for a fun night out, don't miss the Mystery Café Dinner Theater. Function facilities, free parking. Just 1/4 of a block from the Children's and Computer Museums. Lunch Mon.-Sat. 11:30-4 p.m., Dinner Mon.-Sat. 4-11 p.m., Brunch Sun. 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Mystery Café Dinner Theater Wed., Thurs., Fri., 7 p.m.; Sat. 6 & 9 p.m., Sun. 6 p.m.

WARREN TAVERN
241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, B-5. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals & athletes. Also daims to attract Boston's most beautiful women (?!) Local celebs don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

POP/JAZZ/ BLUES/REGGAE

CANTAB LOUNGE
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

RATHSKELLER
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Boston, C-5
Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs, and R.E.M. The RAt attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs.

WESTERN FRONT
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

DANCING

AVALON
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, D-5. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

AVENUE C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, C-6. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

PIANO ROOMS

MONDAY'S PIANO BAR
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline, D-3. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

BREWERIES

COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

IRISH

BLACK ROSE
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your cladaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

THE GREEN BRIAR
304 Washington St., Brighton 789-4100
Stop in and say "HI" to Rocky; one of the colorful characters that serve to recreate a wee bit of the old sod here in the promised land. We have entertainment Wednesday - Monday. Pulling Boston's Best Guinness and offering weekly drink specials. Cover varies. North Station stop on the Green Line.

KINVARA PUB
34 Harvard Ave., Allston, 783-9400, C-2
If you are looking for a happening place with an Irish pub flavor, the Kinvara Pub is the place to be. The pub features some of Boston's hottest acts where dancing is the norm. Live bands Wed-Sun. Sun. night - DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served unti midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled anc draft beer, but the Guiness shouldn't be missed Open 7 days a week until 2AM and ample parking in rear. Casual dress.

O'LEARY'S
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

About Last Night. . . / Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

GETTING WHACKED ON THE WATERFRONT

"...There's definitely a wide range of people at Tia's. In fact, last summer, I distinctly remember seeing a sailor there..."

Wondering where everybody's going after work almost every weeknight of the summer? Feeling sort of lost and lonely and left out when the tumbleweeds drift down State and Federal Streets, and you can't find any of the downtown kindred souls who burst out their cubicles at 5 p.m. with a slightly deranged, glazed-over look, foaming at the mouth, and muttering incoherently to themselves? Wanna know what they're saying? "Tia's, Tia's. gotta get to Tia's," they chant over and over like some kind of mantra.

Yes, the strung-up-tighter-than-a-pig-in-a-hog-tying-contest downtown types all escape wildly from their 9-5 constraints and head down to Tia's at the Long Wharf, to sit at the outdoor patio and mingle happily with their friends who have also just been recently released from a skyscraper. They come here from 53 State Street, from 1 Federal, from International Place, from Post Office Square, to while away a summer's evening, unwind after the stress of the office, and forget for a while that tomorrow they're just going to have to wake up and do it all over again. Oh, the daily grind of people who have to work for a living. (Wait a minute, I have to work for a living. Something is seriously wrong here. Oh God, I need a drink: quick, somebody, get me to Tia's!)

Tia's really only has one season (summer, duh!) but during that season it probably does more business than all the other bars on the waterfront combined. The outdoor patio is the after-work meeting and mingling spot for just about everybody who works downtown. But if you're starting to get the suspicion that Tia's is only for those who wear a suit and tie (or a skirt, blazer, and Reeboks) to work, well, you're right. But not completely. There's definitely a wide range of people at Tia's. In fact, last summer, I distinctly remember seeing a sailor there.

Tia's has the reputation among the slightly snobby set as being a haven for tourists and "those" kind of people. This could quite possibly be due to the fact that it is right across the street from Faneuil Hall, capital du kitsch, and so naturally the location does attract tourists and "those" kind of people. However, Tia's does have a lot going for it; otherwise, why would everyone stand in line all night just to get in and have a drink? For one, it has a humongous patio, and on a booming Thursday, Friday, or Saturday night, you could conceivably run into just about everyone in the world but the Dalai Lama. Just the sheer volume considerably improves your chances of meeting a date-of-the-moment there, and if you can't find a new date, you'll probably run into a willing old one that you can manage to maneuver home, if you play your cards right.

Tia's is also conveniently attached to the Marriott, so if you happen to have one or two drinks at the bar, and it somehow becomes one or two too many, or if the urge to merge suddenly gets overwhelming, you can just stumble inside and book yourself a nice suite. For those of you who require less plush accommodations, the seal pen at the Aquarium is also right next door.

The last time I was at Tia's on a rocking, hot Friday night, I did not actually need to make use of the Marriott accommodations. I did, however, run into three ex-whatever you want to call them, two potentials, and met about twenty that never were and never will be on the list. By the time last call (1:30) rolled around, I had chased and been chased around the bar at least thirty times.

Tia's is not exactly Boston's best kept secret, and if you're thick enough that you are still puzzling over where everyone disappeared to after work, or where they had that great time they're talking about on Friday or Monday morning, now you know. See ya at Tia's.

An art nouveau exhibit featuring the work of Klimt, Munch, Kandinsky and Bradley is on view through Oct. 3. Approximately 125 of the museum's finest watercolors are on display until Aug. 15 in "Awash in Color: Homer, Sargent and the Great American Watercolor." MFA's new textile gallery is now open, featuring "From Arts and Crafts to Art Deco" through Aug. 29. MFA also presents "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Part 2" until September. Now through July 3, 1994, see "African and Oceanic Sculpture," with over 44 sculptures and masks from west and central Africa, along with some from the South Pacific. Call 267-9300.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Science Park, Boston
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (25 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle — all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Through Sept. 12. Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. ASL interpreters will be on hand July 10. Call 589-0270.

MUSEUM OF TRANSPORTATION
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Muscle Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. Call 522-6547 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM
Central Wharf, Boston
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious – and dangerous – sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND SPORTS MUSEUM
Cambridgeside Galleria, Cambridge
The Sox last won the World Series in 1918 - ancient history, huh? Well, it's actually not that long ago in the scope of the NESM. This place has everything that has anything to do with New England sports, including lots of interactive exhibits - like one where you can catch a pitch thrown by Roger Clemens. The best thing is that it's open the same hours as the mall, so you can go on a weeknight and have the place all to yourself.

OLD STATE HOUSE
206 Washington St., Boston
This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

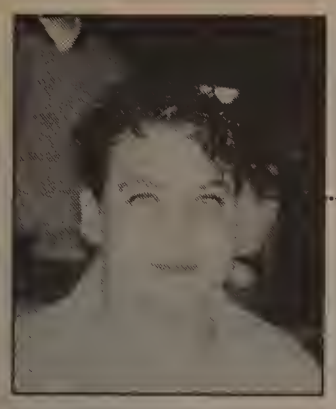
PAUL REVERE HOUSE
19 North Square, North End
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338 for more information.

THE USS CONSTITUTION MUSEUM
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

THEATER

AMERICAN REPERTORY THEATRE
Loeb Drama Center
64 Brattle St., Harvard Square
We promise, you'll be able to see it. The ART presents Le Cirque Invisible (that's "The Invisible Circus" for the completely language-deficient) from Aug. 17-Sept. 6. It's a mix of comedy, acrobatics, animal acts, magic and sheer theatricality; tickets range from $18-$42, with special discounts for kids under $15. Call 547-8300.

BACK ALLEY THEATER
1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge
Move over Frankie and Annette! Make way for Psycho Beach Party, an outrageous spoof of beach party movies and '60s psychodrama, with a little Mommie Dearest thrown in for good measure. Performances are Aug. 5-8 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15, $10 for students and seniors; call 576-1253.



CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
76 Warrenton St., Boston
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work, with a celebrity guest D.J. every night. A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912 for times and ticket prices.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
74 Warrenton St., Boston
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, Shear Madness is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. Set in the city in which it

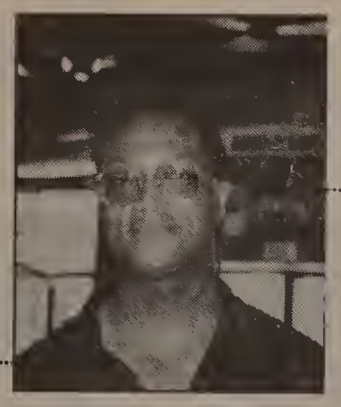
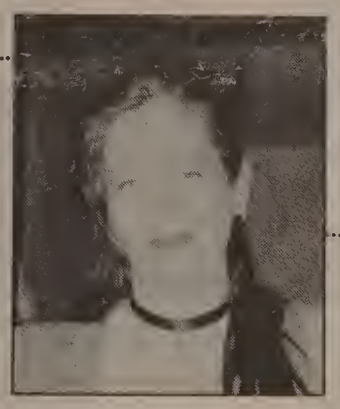
BY LESLIE

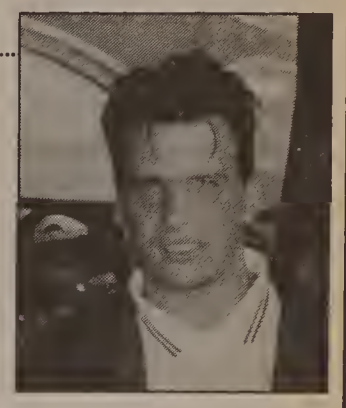


"What do you think of the Boston music scene?"



Amy, 22, Peabody.
"I think it's lame. The clubs don't stay open late and it doesn't cater enough to a younger crowd."

Russ, 24, Brighton.
"There are great local bands that don't get the recognition they deserve. How good you are isn't as important as who you know."



Winston, 35, Brighton.
"It's too much of a rock'n roll town geared for the younger set. Boston needs more R&B and live jazz clubs."

Juliette, 21, Amherst.
"There are a lot of good diverse bands that you can see in a lot of good small clubs."

Klaske, 28, Holland.
"It's great. There's variety and lots of talent, as long as you take the trouble to look for it."

Dicky.
Mighty Mighty BossTones
"Boston is artistically smarter than most cities. Even at its weakest, it's still the best."

plays, Shear Madness allows the audience to become sleuths and solve the murder mystery. Call 426-5225 for times and ticket prices.

KENDALL CAFE
233 Cardinal Medeiros Ave., Cambridge
Well, it sounds kinky to us: Steps Theater Company presents The Throb of Life, an ongoing, continuing radio drama for adults only. Admission is $7; call 499-9580 for reservations and information.

MEDIEVAL MANOR
246 E. Berkeley St., Boston
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of "Dark Ages" dining, this satiric musical transports its audience back to a comedic castle cabaret. There is no silverware for the six-course meal, customers have to raise their hands to leave the room, and everyone must pay homage to the king. Call 423-4900 for times and ticket prices.

MYSTERY CAFE
290 Congress St., Boston
To celebrate its 5th year, the Mystery Cafe presents Murder at Rick's Cafe and Let's Kill the Boss. Tickets, which include a four course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

TERRACE ROOM
Park Plaza Hotel, Boston
Forever Plaid, a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

THREE CHEERS
290 Congress St., Boston
The sketch comedy troupe Heavily Medicated Faerie Tales performs Aug. 11; tickets are $6. Call 423-6166 for time.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this summer will be for Miss Saigon, the tragic love story of an American G.I. and the Vietnamese woman he left in Saigon. It's a must-see, but it's only here until Sept. 12. Call 931-2222 for times and ticket prices.

LECTURES/READINGS

ART DECO SOCIETY OF BOSTON
Emerson College
Zero Marlborough St., Boston
"Restoring the Hatch Shell," a slide lecture on the massive renovation project completed in June 1991, will be held Aug. 17 from 6-9 p.m. Tickets are $8; refreshments will be served. Call 325-4631.

LONGFELLOW HISTORIC SITE
105 Brattle St., Cambridge
The Summertime Stories series continues Aug. 14 at 3 p.m. with "The Myth of the Fairer Sex: Stories of Strong Women." A poetry reading is scheduled Aug. 15 at 3 p.m.; Richard Moore and David Williams are featured. Admission to all events at this beautiful home is free. Call 876-4491.

NEW ACROPOLIS
1152 Beacon St., Brookline
The New Acropolis presents "Rome Decadence and Rebirth," a lecture on the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, Aug. 6 at 8 p.m. Suggested donation: $5. Call 277-9422.

T.T. THE BEAR'S PLACE
10 Brookline St.
Central Square, Cambridge
T.T.'s presents Stone Soup Poetry every Monday. Call 492-0082. Donation is $3; show begins at 8 p.m.

GALLERIES

ALIANZA GALLERY
154 Newbury St., Boston
This hip gallery presents its annual exhibition of ceramic teapots at its "Tea and Fantasy" show, through Aug. 31. See diner teapots, neon teapots, cow teapots, and more! This show is always a lot of fun.

BOSTON CENTER FOR THE ARTS
539 Tremont St., Boston
The BCA presents an exhibit celebrating the portrait: "His People, Her People, Their People," portraits of shared friends and acquaintances by Ralph Hamilton and Elsa Dorfman. It runs through Aug. 23 in the Mills Gallery.

CRYSTAL BLUE BEADING CO.
565 Mt. Auburn St., Watertown
An exhibition of Yoruba African Beadwork will be on view until Aug. 21. African beadwork is different from that of the Native Americans, and this display includes beaded crowns, a ceremonial sword, jewelry and clothes. Call 923-2337 for more information.

NOSTALGIA FACTORY
336 Newbury St., Boston
The Factory salutes the "Dog Days" of August with a month-long exhibition of original old advertising - dating from the late 19th century to the early 1970s - featuring canines. Call 236-8754.

VOSE GALLERIES
238 Newbury St., Boston
The oils of French artist Charles Rousselon are on display through September, depicting the life and marvelous scenery of Normandy and the Opal Coast.

CLASSICAL

LONGFELLOW HISTORIC SITE
105 Brattle St., Cambridge
The Gloucester Hornpipe and Clog Society gives a free concert Aug. 8 at 3 p.m. Call 876-4491.

HARVARD SUMMER CHORUS
The Sanders Theater at Harvard, Cambridge
The Harvard Summer Chorus will be performing Dvorak's Stabat Mater on Friday, August 6th. The concert begins at 8pm. Free admission.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
Every Wednesday through Aug. 11 at 7:30 p.m., MFA presents "Concerts in the Courtyard." Enjoy the cajun/zydeco rhythms of the Boogaloo Swamis on Aug. 4 in MFA's elegantly landscaped courtyard; bring a picnic dinner or buy it there. No alcohol, please. Doors open at 6 p.m.; call 267-9300 x300 for a program. Tickets are $12.

S-HIP
Emmanuel Church
15 Newbury St., Boston
The Society for Historically Informed Performance sponsors a recital by Second Wind, featuring two recorders, a harpsichord and a cello. The group will perform Aglio e Olio, a concert of virtuosic music from Baroque Italy, including Merula, Castello, Corelli and Vivaldi, with a dash of Bach and Marcello for good measure. On Aug. 5 at 8 p.m.; tickets are $10, $6 for students and seniors. Call 661-9329.

TANGLEWOOD
Lenox, MA
This beautiful outdoor facility is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, along with other special guests. The BSO - conducted by Seiji Ozawa - performs Aug. 6-8. Call 931-2000 for times and tickets.

FILMS

Copley Square, Boston
For the 48th anniversary of the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the BPL presents a screening of Dr. Strangelove Aug. 4 at 6 p.m., followed by Manic Denial, a compelling animated short film about the reality of today's nuclear world. The BPL presents award-winning documentaries every Thursday at 6 p.m.; Aug. 5, it's To Render a Life, an award-winning, intimate portrait of a contemporary poor family in the rural South. And then there's a Barbra (yes, it's spelled right) Streisand film screened every Tuesday evening at 6 p.m. through Sept. 7 - this is pre-Bill employment, of course. Finally, on Mondays at 3 p.m. and 6 p.m., you can see movies on the theme "The Last Golden Age: The '60s Musicals." All films are screened in Rabb Lecture Hall.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
GSU Auditorium
775 Comm. Ave., Boston
BU hosts a summer film festival, with a cool movie each week. All films begin at 7 p.m., and if you can believe this, they're free! Call 353-3635 for a program.

BRATTLE THEATER
40 Brattle St., Cambridge
The Brattle Theater presents a variety of film entertainment from classic to cult features; each day has a different theme, and they change each month. For a full program, call 876-6837.

COOLIDGE CORNER
290 Harvard St., Brookline
Accessible by the green "C" line MBTA (Coolidge Corner stop), this independent first-run moviehouse with renowned art deco features two screens, including the second-largest silver screen in Boston. The Coolidge specializes in presenting the works of a vast array of creative filmmakers from all over the world. Delightfully air-conditioned. Call 734-2500 for a program.

HARVARD FILM ARCHIVE
Carpenter Center
24 Quincy St., Cambridge
Summer at the HFA ranges from the Japanese Okoge, through Aug. 5, to From Hollywood to Hanoi, showing from Aug. 13-26. In between, see Rock Hudson's Home Movies with Seconds from Aug. 6-12. Call 496-6046 for details.

HATCH SHELL
Esplanade, Boston
"Free Friday Flicks," courtesy of WBZ-TV et al, begin on Fridays at sundown (about 8:30 p.m.) at the beautiful Hatch Shell on the Charles River. Aug. 6 it's Bogey and Bergman in Casablanca, and the summer finale, Dead Poets Society (Robin Williams), will be shown Aug. 13. You may want to bring insect repellent. Call 727-9548.

LASERIUM
At the Museum of Science
Science Park, Boston
In the tradition of Lollapalooza, the annual alternative rock concert extravaganza, the museum presents the Lollapalaser show every Friday & Saturday at 8 p.m. - a combination of lasers and music from groups like Living Colour, Jane's Addiction, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Other music themes are on other days; call 723-2500 for a program or more details.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
Suspense/thriller aficionados will be thrilled to go to the MFA's "Early Hitchcock" series. Aug. 5 at 6 p.m. see Bon Voyage (1944), about Gestapo agents, an RAF pilot and the Polish resistance, and Number 17 (1932), a hide-and-seek detective story revolving around a diamond necklace. At 8:30 p.m. that same day, see Murder (1930), Hitchcock's first whodunit, about an actor who investigates the murder of a theater company's star. On Aug. 6, MFA switches gears, to its "Hong Kong Festival 1993." At 5:45 p.m., its Fong Sai-Yuk, a martial arts comedy (really, that's what it says) that is a current box-office hit in Hong Kong, and at 8 p.m., see Once A Thief; it will also be shown Aug. 8 at 1 p.m for more details. Tickets are $6.50. Films are screened almost daily at MFA; call 267-9300 for a schedule.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Mugar Omni Theatre
Science Park, Boston
New to the world of Omnimax is Grand Canyon: The Hidden Secrets, which runs through Oct. 14. For the more tropically-oriented, Omni treats you to Tropical Rainforest, a film that traces the evolution - and destruction - of one of nature's most important creations. Call 723-2500 for show times. Ticket purchase 24 hours in advance is advised.

Fashion Dos and Don'ts

Ding dong. Ding dong. Do you hear what I hear? No, I'm not talking about church bells, school bells, or even door bells. I'm talking about the bells on the bottom. Greg Brady meets Karl Lagerfeld in the resurrected fad we thought would never come back. That's right, the infamous BELL-BOTTOMS! Bostonians are loosening up their puritanical wardrobes and are stepping into the socially conscious 90's where recycling (even in fashion) is totally "in."

This week a distinctively Improper look at the wildest fashion flashback of the season.

We know that the Karate Kid sequel is being cast in town, but is it really necessary to dress for the part off-screen? These bottoms would be better left for the next Van Dam thriller. Perhaps he should have taken some acting lessons from this proper Bostonian who turns heads while strutting her stuff in this sleek and sheik flared creation. This is the quintessential bell bottom in mid-swing.

Bell bottoms are meant to be big by the ankles, not in the buttocks. This emphatically improper Bostonian's "got back" and seems to be storing a little extra in the rear. (Perhaps an 80's flashback to M.C. Hammer harem pants.) She should have taken lessons from the first rate fashion sense of this proper Bostonian who emphasizes the width of her Levi's by wearing slick platform shoes– the ever inseparable partner to bell-bottoms.

These flowing fabrics seem to be slip sliding away and clinging in all the wrong spots. By the way, is she wearing a bra? You decide. But take a look at this noticeable Newburian; Cignal would be proud. This form-fitting, tailored summer blazer contrasts nicely with the easy going style of her fluid pants.

Until next time– Don't let yourself get caught looking anything but your very best!

IF A PICTURE IS WORTH A THOUSAND WORDS...

August 4 - August 17, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too.)

Did you make contact with the spiritual hierarchy from the star Sirius during the Leo-Aquarius full moon (which is when this door opens) or is your new-found enlightenment something you stumbled across at home? It's a quiet weekend, more conversational than confrontational, although Mercury's contact to incisive Mars on Sunday lets you cut through the paperwork and utter the last word on a subject left over from the Mercury retrograde days. Both planets are teetering on their respective edges: Mercury enters Leo with a flourish on Monday night, Mars glides into Libra on the 11th. Cuspy people will feel the shift more than those planted squarely in the middle of their sun or rising signs. What we'll all feel is the need to indulge ourselves, show off, be divinely lazy and outrageously optimistic – the "not good for you" joys of a Venus-Jupiter square. If you can't control yourself, the 11th will be very expensive. Reach instead for the stars; get to the top of a mountain and catch the Perseid meteor showers – 50 per hour. Life gets more intense around the 15th when the sun squares potent Pluto and we prepare for the Leo new moon on the 17th, exactly at 9:28 a.m. Love becomes strange, you attract oddballs and spacecases while Venus opposes nebulous Neptune and erratic Uranus later that night.

ARIES (March 20-April 19)

An Aries moon this weekend makes for rambunctious Rams. Whether you're carousing at home or in the field won't matter – your companions will be as playful as you are and slightly more generous. Make sure this party goes on their expense account, not yours. You possess a raging creative spirit and they want to tap into it, to give it a literary or legal (as in deal) form. Discuss the small print on Sunday before Mars enters Libra, your cosmic complement on Wednesday and you get distracted by love.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Bide your time, hang out at home and celebrate the joys of summer while you can. A crisis of sorts, pleasurable but expensive is building; it'll reach a head around Wednesday when your Venus ruler squares enthusiastic Jupiter. Then the paranoia can strike: are you having too much fun, how much is it really costing lovelife-wise and are you willing to pay in full? Take a holiday, maybe take acting lessons, but to buy out an entire theater so that you can perform is entirely too much ego-gratification!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

Emotions don't have to soar or radically drop down if you concentrate on a financial matter that involves the family or the next place you want to call home. If need be, you might break some sort of ground. An addition? The focus of your interest changes when your Mercury ruler leaves real-estate oriented, domesticated Cancer (after a long 10 weeks) for playful Leo. You'll need to be admired for your creativity, but don't spend a fortune trying to win approval. In two weeks you won't care.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

One good thing about Leo time is that you see money matters in a brighter light, so if you were a bit worried, you'll feel cheerier about your financial future. However, this is not a license to go overboard. That comes from loving Venus in your own sign squaring generous Jupiter in Libra, your home-base on Wednesday. Whether you want to entertain lavishly, buy expensive art for the house or spend because it feels right, you should know that there's no counterbalance to excess and extravagance this week.

LEO (July 23-August 22)

You can think your way through any problem with ease and speed this weekend, particularly what to buy and how much to spend. But in the middle of the week, a colleague or a group with whom you're affiliated (the union?) demand more from you. Ever-generous Leo cubs are eager to have a good time, to celebrate themselves and make everyone else feel good, but there's a tendency to let cock-eyed optimism blind you to the truth. So what! It's your season and finally there's a decent reason to indulge.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22)

Clarity and purpose. An educated friend comes up with the latest data you need to proceed. And while your move doesn't have to be of heroic proportions, this is the last week Mars will be in Virgo, so take advantage of his bravura if you need it. Otherwise just relish the show presented by your Mercury ruler transiting through the grandeur that is Leo. Two weeks of playing around, creating your own toys or hobnobbing with the social lions is the best way to get through the dog (Sirius again) days of August.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22)

You're lit, which in astroparlance means you're experiencing meaningful planetary relationships and, we trust, human ones too. But what felt enjoyable, expansive and easy a month ago can become a major issue between the two of you this week. Plus the pressure to be even more generous, to reach out to an influential maternal type or a foreign publisher may turn into a flamboyant fiasco. If you realize you're overstepping the bounds of good taste and are willing to pay dearly for your fun, then go for it.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21)

Who is that smart aleck and why is he asking you to join his table of friends? Social connections to academia and companies from abroad continue and, although the contacts might not seem impressive, one may turn out to be a really big deal. Think about your career and reputation while the Leo sun lights up your midheaven. The rest – joint income to pay the bills and carefree romantic sentiments – are abundant enough to drive you slightly manic if you let them. Summer fun.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21)

The cutting edge dulls – Mars moves out of supercritical Virgo – on the 11th. No more sharp words from the paternal powers that be, the boys in the back room or the healing, fashion and craftsmanship hierarchies. Everybody becomes more diplomatic about your career at least until the sun enters Virgo. Adding to the high and slightly hysterical flavor is an emotional challenge to your gung-ho Jupiter ruler. This is the "cheer your little heart out" aspect that drains you dry. Still betting on the Red Sox?

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20)

In a way you're out of the hot seat this week, or so it will seem to your mate, who just might grab this opportunity to shower you with affection and insights, to soothe the ruffled ego and, unfortunately, stick you with the bill. Any overture on anybody else's part can be too effusive, too expansive, too emotional for words. Exhausted or simply embarrassed trying to look pleased for their sake? Actually this would be a good time to take a break, to prepare for an onslaught of activity at the end of August.

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 18)

Just remember that as long as the sun is in Leo, you're bound to focus (but not obsessively, please) on the Other. Where is your soulmate, is this partnership working out, and is this all there is this time around? Mercury in Leo brings clever youngsters to your scene, and there's an undercurrent of excessive emotion that can make you fall for any warm, cuddly critter in your path. Your urge to nurture can be enlightening and expensive, but it won't wipe you out. Actually playing patron can be fun.

PISCES (February 19-March 19)

Fish born near the Aries cusp could be engaged in battle until feisty Mars in your marriage house moves to Libra on the 11th. For you guys, the normal give-and-take of any close relationship might be more brutal than usual right now. The other Pisces in the pond focus on the home front, the kitchen and the many ways they can absorb huge quantities of money – a really good school, the top-of-the-line stove/range/grill, perhaps a redesigned landscape with the soothing sound of a waterfall and some koi.

The Elements of Style — Discounted

Factory outlets tend to be at the edge of town in huge warehouses. Elements, which bills itself as the "Ultimate Factory Outlet Store," blends right into the flow, traveling incognito amid its chic neighbors. Vending the overstocks of gift shops, certain catalogues, and some museum shops, they also serve as an outlet for designers of jewelry and sundry other, sometimes comic, things. For instance, a cup showing the back end of a cow, plunging with udders, is one of their best sellers. This is also a good place to find the picture frames of irony, many done in a dark, marbly green with such "Yeah? So what?" decorations as a spoon and a fork on either side of the picture. Shockingly cheap and yet substantial are the Mexican glass pieces – tall green or blue glasses with an intended irregularity, some with stripes of thick glass around them, as low as $5 per glass. Just some of the other items offered are wool throw blankets in plaid (60" by 84") for $48, as opposed to the list price of $98; interesting toiletries including rough, chunky soaps, and the Mexican ayate, a deceptively light cloth that, once soaked and softened, exfoliates skin in the tub. There are also deadpan clocks for $28, with only the most stony-faced background, and maybe a joke or two around the key hours; the South West Clock, for instance, scrunches 12, 3, 6, and 9 in the lower right corner and marks them with a horse, a star, a cowboy and a lasso.

Spinning Your Own Wheels

Wonderfully true, after all these years, to the spirit that was a lot more common in 1972 when they opened, the Broadway Bicycle School is still owned and run as a collective. For the participant/consumer – since this is a place that teaches you how to tune up and repair your bike – that trickles democratically down to signify true-blue low prices. The goal, in modern parlance, is "empowerment," making it possible for the cyclist to be more independent on the path if repairs need doing, and bringing the biker closer to, as they put it locally, "her or his" own bike. For $12 an hour, one-on-one (or one-on-a-few) teaching will include changing a flat, "truing" the wheel, fixing the brakes, adjusting the gears, on up to overhauling the bottom bracket. Then there are classes on Sunday (these are for women only), Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. A shorter fix-it visit to make on-site minor repairs costs only $6 (and the place is so fair-minded your time is pro-rated). There's an air of scholarly grease, sweat, and serious fun about the people working here, their bikes on the stand, wheels twirling away, and an aesthetic of tinkering, like car-repair writ small, or clock-repair writ larger. What they sell – parts, rain gear, and politically conscious T shirts, some to raise money for Nicaragua ("Bikes Not Bombs") – is described as "good quality, less expensive, lasts a long time." Of course, you can applaud the effort, and the atmosphere, and still leave your bike to be repaired or tuned-up by the collective for a bit more money, but you will still leave having been incidentally tuned in, yourself, to some of the features of the tune-up you've just gotten. The School strongly supports year-round biking, especially as a commuting method, and even offers a workshop on that subject. Closed Monday.

Little Sister

Katie, the narrator of Elizabeth Berg's novel Durable Goods, which is written in a sort of dreamy trance of early adolescent yearning, has a dead mother, a distant, surly, and sometimes violent father, and a sister, Diane, who blazes the cool and exotic trail up ahead into serious grown-up adolescence. Similarly, her friend Cherylanne, with her contemptuously hip superiority, contributes to Katie's feeling of being the one who's watching, bumbling, straggling forward but never quite catching up with the more sophisticated girls, but that is exactly her charm. Elizabeth Berg is so gracefully inside her narrator's lightly quirky longing for adventure – the adventures of love and sex – and for safety and security – buffers from her angry father, and from her motherless state – that when she has Katie entering into a small fantasy, the sentences soften to glide her seamlessly into the desired state. As her father is berating Diane, Berg writes: "I hear furniture scrape across her floor. He pushes her sometimes before he hits her. I put the pillow over my head. I live on a farm, alone, with many animals. The sky overhead is flat and deep blue. No clouds." In remembering her mother, she floats on the soft, matter-of-fact footprints of the present tense to wish her back to life: "But then right after we left the grave site she woke up and said 'Just a minute, just a minute. I am still alive.' Someone helped her out of the casket and said "Well, for heaven's sake, let me call your family." D*urable Goods* is a grown-up's novel of growing up, or trying to.

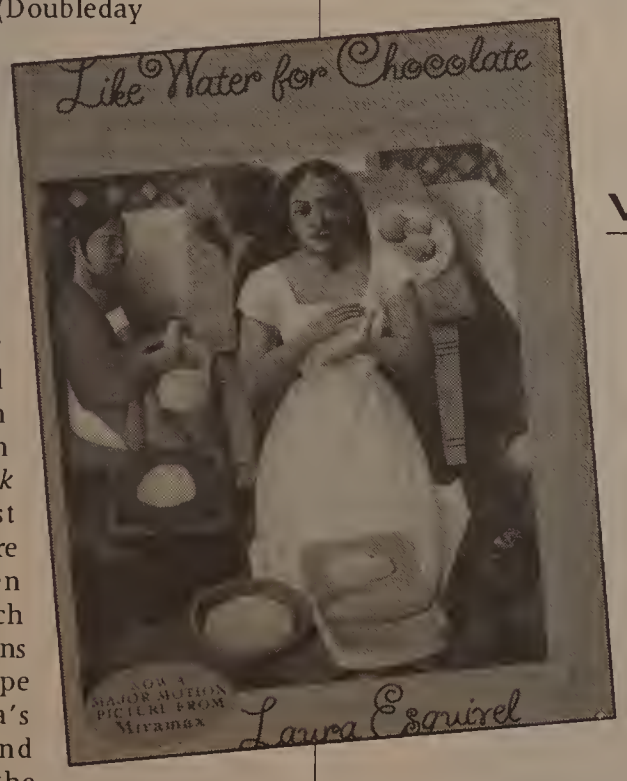
What's Hot in Boston Now



Beverage

Cider Jack. Before prohibition, hard cider was the holiday drink of choice for millions of consumers around the world, and in 1991, 80 million gallons of hard cider were consumed in Europe alone. Now here at home in Boston, hundreds of pubs serve it on tap or in bottles. With an alcohol content just slightly above beer, and a crisp, dry after taste, Cider Jack is the all natural summer refresher with a kick.

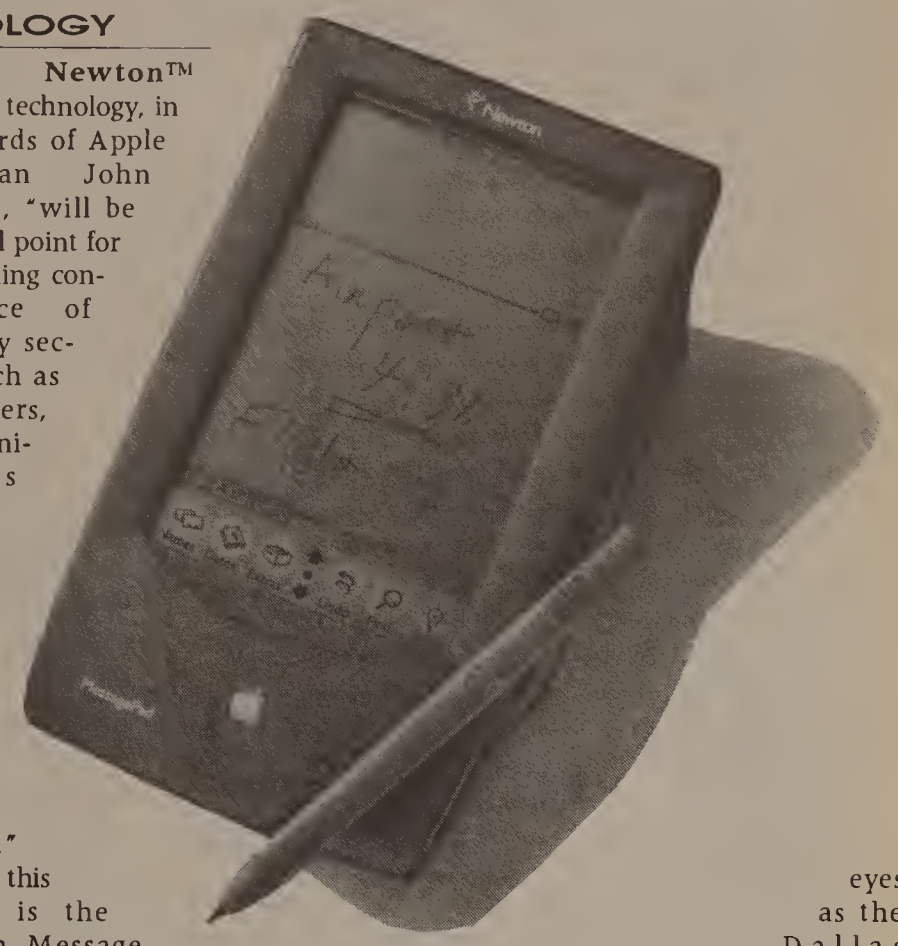
Books

Like Water for Chocolate. Laura Esquivel. (Doubleday Books. $17.50) Tita is the name of the main character that juggles an elusive love affair against her established role within her family in this New York Times best seller of more than fifteen weeks. Each chapter begins with a recipe from Tita's kitchen and chronicles the process by which Tita is driven from her mother and into the odd union that ultimately brings her closer to her lover.

Recordings

Billy Joel, River of Dreams. To the consternation of many critics, the Piano Man, now at 44, has seen eight of his previous ten studio albums thrive in the top ten, while still trying to shake his pop music reputation and produce an album of true depth. From Joel's latest, fans not only get more of the tightly constructed, polished musical packages that Joel is famous for, but an added level of introspection that will remind most of his early albums. Available at Tower records.

James Taylor, James Taylor Live. Although not exactly a foot stomper, most will agree that J.T. seems to be in peak form for this double CD live album recorded on his latest 1992 East Coast Tour. These thirty familiar songs, as followers old and young can attest, hew as close to the bone as they did years ago, and step into the 90s with fresh instrumentation as well.



Concert

Depeche Mode. Great Woods, September 10. For one night only, Great Woods will host one of this decade's biggest draws all over the world. For their latest album, England's 80s electronic dance masters have adopted a harder edge that seems to give them more credibility in today's market. Just look at the posters, leather still means rebel. Call 931-2000 to get your tickets well in advance.

Video

A Few Good Men. Tri-Star Pictures. Tom Cruise is cast as the maverick hot-shot lawyer with an aversion to court-room conflict, in this military thriller that also stars Demi Moore. Moore and Cruise, along with a team of toadies, put their differences aside and decide to fight an unjust military system, personified by the raucous Jack Nicholson. By the finale, it is truly Nicholson that steals the show away from his brat-pack comrades.

Technology

Apple Newton™ Newton technology, in the words of Apple chairman John Sculley, "will be the focal point for the coming convergence of industry sectors such as computers, communications and consumer electronics." Just out this month is the Newton Message Pad™, a palm sized unit that can actually "learn" the habits of its user and coordinate everything from a corporate takeover to a friend's birthday party. On the horizon are many peripherals – such as internal faxes – that seem to make good on Apple's claims.

Movies

The Fugitive. Directed by Andrew Davis. The finale of the 1960's television series caught almost as many eyes as the Dallas episode that answered the question "Who shot JR..?" Now on the big screen, Harrison Ford stars as the Chicago surgeon Dr. Richard Kimble wrongly accused of his wife's murder, who en route to prison, is freed by a freak accident and frantically hunts his wife's killer. Tommy Lee Jones is the obsessive deputy US. Marshall that will stop at nothing to bring Kimble back dead or alive.

Byron Paladin and Jimmy Shearer

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

A Hand Up

We see the acolytes of The Homeless Empowerment Project hawking their newspapers on street corners and at T-stops every day. "Help the homeless help themselves," they sing as they try to sell us awareness and knowledge. How many times have we ignored them, or wanted to buy a copy of Spare Change but were afraid of the "homeless beggar" or "street person" who was straight-backed and proud instead of slump-shouldered and weary?

The people of Spare Change, the publication "By, Of, and For the Homeless," are determined to educate the public about homelessness. "We're trying to bring the issue of homelessness back to the forefront," states Jimmy Shearer, the managing editor of the newspaper, "Nobody worries about them...it only comes up every Thanksgiving and Christmas."

Jimmy is a warrior. Every day he fights to eliminate the myriad of stereotypes that misrepresent this group of people with which he shared the streets of Boston for 13 years. "We want to show that homeless people, given the economic means, can accomplish things," he states vehemently. "People think we can't put two and two together," adds production manager Byron Paladin, "and that's just not true."

Byron is as his surname is defined: a heroic and knightly champion. He is a homeless veteran who found his way from the streets of Boston to the pages of Spare Change. He recalls the days when he used to shine the shoes of privileged Bostonians while he wondered what shelter he would be sleeping in that night. Like his editor, Byron knows firsthand that the line that divides the homeless from the rest of the population is a thin one. "You can take everybody from every level of society," he says from beneath his signature black leather hat, "and you will find a homeless person who has been in their shoes."

Spare Change has gone through a metamorphosis since its debut on May 7, 1992. What started out as a personalized journal of the homeless in Boston has grown into a respectable investigative publication. Both Jimmy and Byron, who have been with the newspaper since its inception, agree that they have a distinct advantage to be "working" for Spare Change rather than "bumming" spare change.

"25 years down the road, when people talk about the homeless movement, I want them to talk about Spare Change," Jimmy says about his goals for the paper, "I want us to be a major influence."

Catherine Silirie

BY NICOLE L. MILLS

The Days of Wine and Roses

If you hear Cat (Catherine) Silirie say "Great legs." around you, she's probably not talking about yours. At 29, Cat is one of only three women sommeliers (that's wine steward, to the unwashed) in the city. In her position at Rocco's restaurant on Charles Street South, she selects and buys the wines for the extensive wine list that accompanies Rocco's Northern Italian menu. How did she make the decision to become a cave dweller, so to speak? There's no formal training involved in becoming a sommelier, but Cat, who had been working in restaurants since she was fourteen, just started to gravitate towards the liquid side of the restaurant business. "I was just a firefly in a jar all through college," she smiles, "Trying to find something that interested me. Wine fascinated me."

She worked at Grille 23 for two years before joining owners Patrick and Jane Bowe at Rocco's, a theater district hot spot. Although many patrons are slightly surprised to have a sommelier on premises to help them with their choice and answer questions about vintages and accompaniments, Cat believes that they are pleased that "Someone cares and is selecting the wine, and knows about the food. If you go out to dinner, and you know the chef is preparing something special, you want to think that there's a special wine to go with it. I love the gratification of bringing wine to the table."

In choosing Rocco's wine list (which carries over 90 labels), Cat aims for an extensive variety, but she is definitely "Gearing up to have an all-Italian wine list. There are so many regions in Italy, it's like separate countries. People think Italian wine and they think Chianti, but there's much more."

She is also working on developing a wine list for the Harvest restaurant in Harvard Square, which the Bowes recently bought, and she "Keep[s] bugging Patrick to open a wine bar. I want to call it 'Miss Kitty's Wine Bar,' and offer everything imaginable."

Asked about her own personal favorite wine, she says "It's the variety I love." She laughs, "I have to have a little white wine before I have my red wine."

As sommelier, Cat informs the customer about wine, and simplifies the selection process. But she doesn't want to bring wine down to a pedestrian level. "Restaurateurs are always saying that we have to 'demystify' wine. To me, wine is the most mysterious and poetic thing."

LIGHT UP THE NIGHT

Design Industries Foundation for AIDS

By Linda Ventura

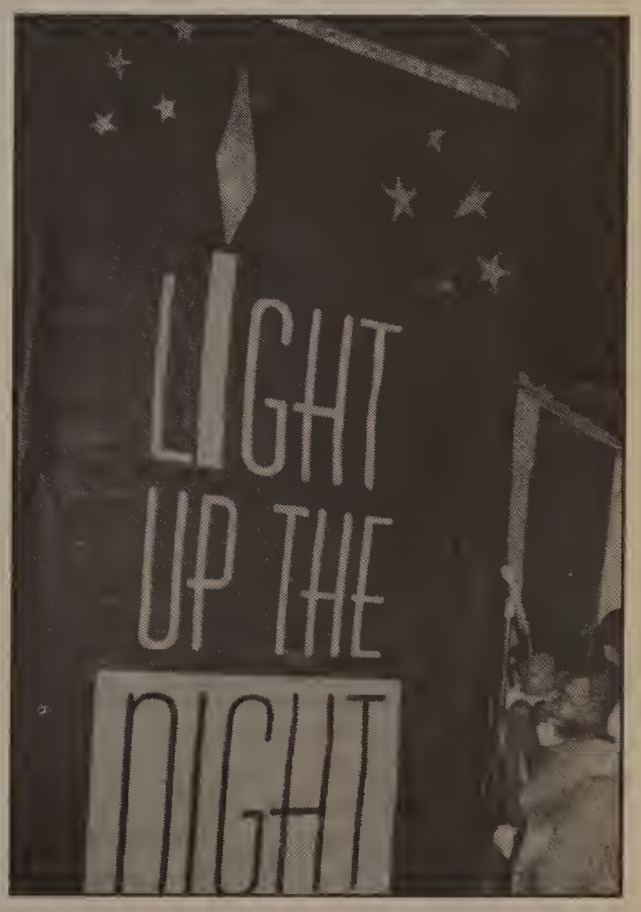
Today's sobering reality is that we are eleven years into the AIDS epidemic, with no cure in sight. And if there is one crucial thing that we have learned from these eleven years is that regardless of who is in the White House, it is the community-based AIDS service organizations across the country that will continue to be on the front lines in the battle against AIDS and HIV illness. One of the greatest vanguards of community-based AIDS service is DIFFA.

Founded in 1984 by textile designers Pat Green and Larry Pond, Design Industries Foundation for AIDS (DIFFA) was established to raise funds for AIDS/HIV programs throughout the United States. DIFFA originally began with volunteers from the fields of interior design, furnishings, and architecture, but now has expanded to include the efforts of all sectors of the design world, including fashion, graphics, textiles, industrial, and tabletop. It is this creative mixture of volunteered talents that, according to event co-chair Marilyn Stahl, makes DIFFA so uniquely successful.

This broad-based support makes DIFFA the only national industry-based foundation that responds, through the awarding of grants, to the wide range of needs presented by HIV illness and AIDS. DIFFA's principle activity is to raise and distribute funds to AIDS organizations and projects nationwide, making it first and foremost a grant giving foundation. DIFFA has funded more than $17 million in grants to a range of up to 800 organizations and programs in 48 states that have responded in direct and innovative ways to the needs of people with HIV and AIDS. These grants are carefully awarded in periodic granting cycles to organizations that "provide direct services to people with HIV and AIDS illness; foster awareness and prevention through education and outreach programs; and promote public policy and advocacy initiatives."

Although DIFFA has nationally responded to the AIDS epidemic, it is unique for its community level organization and direct focus on local needs. The Foundation's policy requires that at least 85% of all monies raised by the steering committees stay in their locale to support AIDS services and community education. The remaining monies are contributed to the national grants pool, which permits DIFFA to make awards in communities without steering committees, and to fund state and national AIDS organizations.

With branches located in 14 major cities across the nation including Boston, DIFFA raises funds with the help of its strong volunteer base at local and national levels through various fund-raising efforts, including special events, merchandising, and direct solicitation. In addition, the Foundation has broken new grounds and untapped funds by developing marketing strategies that raise grant dollars through company sponsored programs. Such programs are tailored to meet individual corporate needs and are a mechanism for companies to actively support the fight against AIDS and HIV illness by designating a percentage of sales on specific products and campaigns. Some businesses have used their design and marketing skill to create products whose profits are wholly or in part contributed to DIFFA.



In return, DIFFA services its professional community by providing general AIDS information and education to firms, associations, and individuals through print materials, presentations, and referrals.

Major fundraising efforts in the past have included DIFFA's two national tours, "Heart Strings" and "An Event in Three Acts," designed to help communities raise money for their own local service providers and at the same time, serve as educational programs that heighten awareness about AIDS and HIV illness.

Future fundraisers look towards "Arts in Boston" in October, the Dallas Collection in December, that will feature denim jackets revamped and recreated by major designers, and DIFFA's signature event: Celebration '93 on Wednesday, September 22nd at the Roxy. Marilyn Stahl states that this glamorous $200 a plate dinner benefit is "a collaboration of Boston's top designers who will transform each table setting (and even the furniture itself) into a work of art uniquely their own." Proceeds from these events will help fund future grants in efforts to maintain the awareness that everyone is living with AIDS and everyone has to be part of the solution. As the DIFFA slogan so poignantly states: "We are all affected – even if we are not all infected."

What To Do When You Don't Want To Work

Here's a wonderful story of American freedom and independence. Once upon a time, would-be author Sherwood Anderson was running a large and wildly profitable paint factory in Elyria, Ohio, when one day he had a breakdown in the middle of dictating a letter – in fact, in the middle of a sentence about product quality – and just stood up, looked at his secretary, and said, "I have been wading in a long river and my feet are wet." He walked out of the office and headed east towards Cleveland and never returned. A beautiful story, except that he headed towards Cleveland. When it comes to fleeing work for a day of self-indulgence, we have some better suggestions.

the Great Outdoors

Revere Beach
Plum Island
Provincetown
Mt. Monadnock
Concord
Arnold Arboretum

Beaches, islands, and mountains are all obviously high on anyone's list of get-away spots. New England offers a regular smorgasbord of beaches, the extremes being the heavily populated Revere Beach, and the nature sanctuary on Plum Island. The choice essentially boils down to this: Do you prefer to watch the mating rituals of terns, or those of people from north suburban Boston? Revere Beach is close to the city, and the action can be quite lively, especially when you throw in a few hundred gallons of tanning oil. Nature lovers at Plum Island, while enjoying nature in its glory, might also have to endure observing a few fish gasping in the oil-slicks (not the tanning variety).

Plum Island, located up near Newburyport (a lovely old town in itself!) features an amiably desolate coastline, with hissing grass and unselfconscious sea birds. It seems much more remote than it is – but it's best to get there early, since the number of cars allowed on the island is restricted when various protected birds are mating.

For those who want something somewhere between these two beach extremes—both geographically and atmospherically—you might look into Wingersheek Beach near Gloucester off Route 128. You'll find other bathers at Wingersheek, building sand castles and chortling blithely at the open spaces, and unlike Revere, you won't feel like you are watching a badly-cast teen exploitation film.

Many people migrate down to Cape Cod or the South Shore. If you leave early enough, you can drive or catch a boat, and still make it a day trip. The Cape and environs can be a mixed experience. On the good side, there are clam shacks. Throw aside your no-grease diet and make that hedonistic belly-flop into a Clam'n'Onion Boat. Feel that cataract of cholesterol pouring down your chin. Wear a bulky yellow rain slicker to protect your pants. There are also good Cape Cod things like Provincetown, which features a nice selection of small art galleries that welcome browsers, especially during the periodic festivals that are held throughout the summer. The work displayed ranges from the cutting-edge to more traditional paintings of little sea-side shacks, rotting skiffs, and other picturesque insurance liabilities. Provincetown is charming, if somewhat aware of the fact. Unfortunately, many places on the Cape are somewhat less charming than they think. It is possible to die of a surfeit of saltwater taffy without ever eating a bite.

If you are a mountain person rather than a beach person, head north to the New Hampshire mountains. Mt. Monadnock is only about an hour and a half from Boston (Route 3 North to Route 101A to Route 101, look for signs). Monadnock is a geological term meaning solitary mountain; climb up the mount, and it will be just you and the view, featuring bold vistas of distant mountains, rainstorms in Vermont, and even Boston sparkling like a little gem off in the distance on a clear day. You'll feel the tickling of the sublime and you'll want to stand on a cliff and recite Wordsworth or pee all the way down (depending on what makes you feel most on top of the world), and you'll get some fine exercise while you're at it.

If you go out to Concord, MA, you can rent a canoe at the South Bridge Boathouse (508-369-9438), and paddle silently up the Concord River towards historical Old North Bridge, though it is now politically noxious to pretend you are Hiawatha. The Buttrick Mansion, which overlooks the river's lazy meandering, has some beautiful topiary gardens and, inside, a model of the Battle of Old north Bridge which looks just like the real thing, except the people are about an inch tall,but some visitors probably won't even notice.

Boston itself offers any number of daytime delights for those fleeing the grindstone. Those longing for a whiff of old Europe can wander around the north end through the ancient mottled brick streets. Secluded restaurants offer rich, authentic cuisine. Graying postcards from half-remembered relatives dot the walls. Old men hunched at tables hum arias from Rigoletto. And yet, the place is very real.

Romantics might enjoy a ramble through the Arnold Arboretum, a well-molded botanical garden just south of the city, dotted with pleasant groves, perfect for an afternoon's wander. Modernists might enjoy a stroll through the wharf district, flanked by vistas of corroding iron, industrial chasms, and seagulls tearing at carrion, or small children's popcorn, if no carrion is to be found the Great Indoors

If you're determined to stay out of the sun—if you burn easily, for instance, or if you are one of those people hysterically convinced that even roll-on deodorants decimate the ozone layer, or perhaps, you think that a tan would be just too much incriminating evidence that you skipped work to frolic— then there are any number of things you can do indoors. These have the added attraction that you aren't as likely to be spotted by co-workers on a lunch break.

A dark movie theater is guaranteed to throw them off the scent. You'll avoid that embarrassing one-day-flu-tan. Matinee movies are usually several dollars cheaper that the evening showings, and it's easier to find a seat during the day (unless you insist on going to a Care Bears double feature). Almost all the larger theaters in Boston offer matinees; for blockbuster films, you might try the Cheri, the Circle Cinemas, or any of the Loews branches. For more of an emphasis on people in starched collars saying bitter things in Gothic settings, you might try the Nickelodeon or Janus. If you enjoy the alternative theatre scene, you might look into the Coolidge Corner and Somerville Theatres, which are often running fascinating film festivals 'round the clock—everything from Looney Tunes re-runs to surreal Italians crying their woes on fish-back. Events like the Animation Festival, the Science Fiction Film Festival, and the general Boston Film Festival are undoubtedly worth missing work for.

A browse through a book or record store can lend a pleasant, parasseux air to a free day. Make it a sensual experience. Linger over your choice of beach reading. Inhale the scent to fine inks and sturdy paper. Run your fingers over the puffy covers of romances, the pearly jackets of post-modern novellas. Sing out the back-cover blurbs to the tunes of favorite hymns, but maybe sort of quietly. A bookstore like Waterstone's, with wide aisles and fixtures out of a Sargent painting is perfect for an afternoon's browsing, or you might want to try excellent discount stores like the Wordsworth and Barillari Bookstores in Harvard Square, full of eclectic and underpriced treasures.

Boston and Cambridge offer any number of used bookstores, where the selection is more apt to be eccentric, but admirably suited to a slow meander through the stacks. The Harvard Book Store on Mass Ave. sells both new and used books. Because of the university population, the selection is an odd mix of wordy theories on justice and romping tales of the undead. The Avenue Victor Hugo Bookshop, which theoretically stresses the latter, is in fact marvelously well-rounded, with an extensive and very intelligently organized stock of all types of used books. The place also has a pleasant atmosphere; on the walls hang picture-portraits of Woolf and Joyce and yellowed newspaper clipping of obscure and murky meaning. From the stereo drifts the crooning of forgotten show-tunes croaked by a woman who smoked when the Weimar Republic was young; and in the horror stacks sits a copy of the Necronomicon, quietly eating through the woodwork. The proprietor and staff are highly knowledgeable. Also worth mentioning is the Brattle Book Shop, which is tucked away near Lafayette Plaza, and which also offers a wide selection of used books on every conceivable topic, and a few inconceivable ones as well. Their buck-a-book carts outside are worth scavenging through if you have a little time, which undoubtedly you will, since you're skipping work anyway.

If you want to devour your book purchases on the site while sipping something cold—a reasonable idea on a lazy afternoon—you night remember the Harvard Bookstore Cafe on Newbury Street. And if you find yourself looking around shiftily to see if any co-workers are coming, you might think about relocating to the Bookcellar Cafe near Porter Square. In the underground cafe, you'll be safe from most surveillance technology. In keeping with the general theme, they host underground poetry readings in the evenings.

Newbury Street 'Do

Finally, you can spend your stolen day grooming. We needn't dwell at length on the pleasures of reading comic books in a bubble bath. But to really do it right, you should splurge and put yourself in the hands of a professional. A leisurely haircut, manicure, pedicure, facial, or upper body massage can be had at any of the swank salons that line Newbury Street's gilded sidewalks. The "technicians" will eagerly perform strange, ritualistic acts on your head. Enjoy the shampoo, the fingers in your hair, and the murmured club gossip. Nap while the scissors tickle your forehead and the razor purrs against the nape of the neck. Don't do it because you want your hair shorter or bigger. Do it because you can. This is your day of liberation. True decadence is not getting your hair styled and going out to dance and be seen; true decadence is listening to your stylist whoop, "Looks beautiful! And where will you be going this evening?" while you reply,"Nowhere. I'm staying at home in the dark and eating Weaver's chicken and mashed spuds with my hands."

So see some of New England, enjoy the American experience and some unusual American virtues. Walking away from your job is not laziness or cowardice. It's an assertion of your natural independence. It's just that "Go East, young man!" spirit which drove Sherwood Anderson from his paint factory. What could be more American than that? Working is practically treason.

- M.T. Anderson

Shirking Work—A Few Good Reasons

It's hard to throw off the yoke. You moan and make up excuses. You cringe at the thought of sarcastic secretaries and blustering overseers. So we've thought it prudent to remind you of just a few of the reasons why you deserve a break today.

- Summertime. The living is easy.
- You'll have to take the Red Line.
- Fish are jumping and the cotton is high.
- Your boss invites you into to his office wearing chaps and calling you "Miss Lucy."
- The climate is revolting, and you feel that you're wrapped in sweaty cellophane, sometimes even when you aren't.
- You discover you have secretly hoarding paper clips, and singing to them.
- The corn is as high as an elephant's eye, and it looks like it's reaching right up to the sky.
- Your predecessor wasn't promoted. She lives on top of a mountain, prophesies, and eats slugs.
- Surf's up.
- The birds are tweedling in the trees.
- Everyone at work hates you and makes statues of you with nails stuck in them.
- The sky is blue and the breeze is delicious..
- Someday worm will eat your flesh, and it won't really matter much anyways.

So have fun.

JOKELESS WONDER?

". . .Not that Miller is indecisive, it is simply that he does not wish to rule out any argument. . ."

Larry Miller is a thoughtful man. Larry Miller is an intelligent man. Larry Miller is a talented man. Larry Miller is a confusing man. He considers both sides of any issue. He understands both sides of any issue. He agrees with both sides of any issue.

This is not to say that Miller is weak-willed and cannot decide what he believes. He does decide. He decides rather decisively. The problem (well, it's not really a problem (however it does make for a difficult situation, so it would seem to be problematic (on the other hand, it is not like the situation cannot be overcome, it's not as if Miller needs to go to a meeting of Indecisives Anonymous (but then again – nah, forget it!))))) is not that Miller is indecisive, it is simply that he does not wish to rule out any argument.

This attitude helps him deliver his form of humor, which is, for the most part, a catalog of how he views the world. This does not mean that his humor is confusing, but instead his style is thoughtful. In the true spirit of observationalist humor, Miller finds aspects of life that interest him, and he climbs up on stage and reports on these aspects in a humorous manner. Miller himself admits, "If you know my work, you know that there are really no jokes there."

Miller enjoys writing and performing equally, and prefers to have all of his material precisely organized before performing it. So does that mean that once the material is written to his satisfaction it is never adapted, or does it continually evolve over time? "Well," Miller explains, "Both, oddly enough. And that's not contradictory, really." All right, if that's the way he wants it. When he performs, would he consider his material to be observations held by Miller himself, or by a character played by a comic? The comedian responds, "Again, it's hard to be objective." And he backs up his claim by asserting, "To me, that's a direct answer." Well, then, what do you do in order to get a more direct answer? Ask a more direct question. Would Miller consider himself to be a dog person or a cat person? Once again, Miller says, "I'm answering honestly when I say both. I mean, who doesn't love a kitten? You see a kitten and you say, 'Oh, it's a kitten.' On the other hand who doesn't like a dog, because you see one and you say, 'Oh, it's a dog.'"

"Sometimes I think I've missed a great career in the foreign services," Miller contemplates, "because it's a sincerely honest answer to me to say, 'Well, it's both, actually.'"

TO BE OR NOT TO BE? Maybe.
Larry Miller, in the true spirit of observationalist humor.

But even if he has Clinton-esque trouble taking sides on some issues, Miller is certain that he is happy as a performer. When it comes down to the basics, Miller enjoys performing his stand-up in the relaxed atmosphere of comedy clubs. When push comes to shove and we must face our judgment and discover who we really are, Miller already knows. "I'm a joke teller," he says, plain and simple. But, didn't he say before that his comedy doesn't really contain jokes? Is he a joke teller or isn't he? Which is it? Well, it's both, actually. ❑

Clowning Around

The Circus(es) are coming to town

The American Repertory Theatre is hosting the return of "Le Cirque Invisible," from August 17 through September 5. This mini-entertainment, delightfully mixing comedy, acrobatics, animal acts, magic, and theatrical fantasy, is performed by a versatile three-person company – Victoria Chaplin, Jean Baptiste Thierrée, and their son, James Spencer Thierrée – who have just completed a critically acclaimed world-wide tour. For tickets and information, call the ART box office: 547-8300.

Fun With the Sun

On a much larger scale, the Montreal based Cirque du Soleil is bringing its new show, "Saltimbanco," to Boston's Fan Pier, September 9 through 19. This is the celebrated company's first time in this city, and they're setting up their own blue and yellow circus tent on Northern Avenue, next to the World Trade Center, to accommodate more than 40 performers, a theatrical set, and seats for 2500 spectators.

In a recent interview, on the day after a hectic opening night in Chicago, Artistic Director Gilles Ste. Croix spoke ardently about the company and the show. The production is grounded in circus and theatrical arts, where athletics, music, costumes, and a conceptual theme magically blend into an entertainment for all ages. "Saltimbanco," which is an old Italian word for "street performers," began with the inspiration of urban life, and built upon unifying concerns of family and community. The individual circus acts – featuring acrobats, trapeze artists, contortionists, etc. – are tailored to fit in with the general theme. "Saltimbanco," Mr. Ste.-Croix emphasized, "has something for everyone," – and he's constantly surprised by the public's positive reaction.

For tickets, call the Cirque du Soleil's local box office at 426-0611 or ticketmaster at 931-2000.

Shakespeare Express

The Shenandoah Shakespeare Express, a 12-member professional touring company, is presenting Anthony and Cleopatra, Romeo and Juliet, and A Midsummer Night's Dream, in repertory at the BCA Theater, Boston Center for the Arts, through August 22. The "young and lively company," based in Harrisonburg, Virginia, dedicates itself to contemporary, uncluttered productions of Shakespeare, and tries to stage its shows under the specified set of conditions with which the author designed them. For information, call 426-5000.

Hughie

Trinity Repertory Company in Providence, Rhode Island, is celebrating its 30th birthday with a special appearance by Jason Robards as Erie Smith in Eugene O'Neill's Hughie for one week only, August 17 through August 22. The renowned American actor originated the role and received a Tony nomination for it in 1965. For further information, call 401-351-4242.

A Funny Thing. . .

A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum concludes the season at the open-air Publick Theater on Soldiers' Field Road in Boston. Artistic Director Spiro Beloudos is playing the lead role of the conniving servant Pseudolus, whose efforts to win his freedom by gaining a bride for his master propel this riotous musical adventure.

A Grand Performance

The musical Grand Hotel plays at the North Shore Music Theater in Beverly through August 21. Cyd Charisse is recreates her Broadway replacement role as Elizaveta Grushinskaya, the aging ballerina at the end of her career. Keith Rice, who appeared in last year's Phantom (the Arthur Kopit/Maury Yeston version, which was lavishly praised by its Beverly audiences) plays her lover, the Baron. For tickets and information, call 508-922-8500.

If you Missed the Show

Miss Saigon has been extended at the Wang Center through October 9.

SUN DANCE: The Montreal Based Cirque du Soleil will be bringing its new show Saltimbanco to Fan Pier September 9 through 19.

AMERICAN HEART

This low-budget, independent feature restores to cinema the off-beat, gritty Seattle of yore before the city became synonymous with single, sleepless yuppies crying into their Starbuck's cappuccino. Unfortunately it turns Seattle's unhappy street life into a freak show. Jack Kelson (Jeff Bridges), a stringy-haired and tattooed ex-con who's out on parole, tries to walk the straight line in Seattle so he can make it to Alaska. But he's stuck with a job washing windows, a not very helpful ex-partner, and a round-the-clock conscience: his 15-year-old son. While there's something ever-potent in the story of a motherless, wise-before-his-time boy trying to domesticate his erratic, irresponsible dad, the film alternates between having no plot or suddenly, too much plot and a stupid one at that.

The government wants her to testify. A notorious Chicago crime family wants her dead. Or is it the other way around? With a film this forgettable it hardly matters. When assistant D.A. Rosie O'Donnell sets up house with cops Richard Dreyfuss and Emilio Estevez in a stakeout to find the missing woman, the result is a lot of amusing bickering "All In The Family" style. Double agents, double takes, and double-entendres make up the [illegible] of this muddled but ambitious gun-in-cheek story. With few real action/suspense scenes, [illegible] relies heavily on the antics and banter of [illegible]tched trio, which are good but in the [illegible]gh.

M.R.D'ENTREMONT

[illegible]ADS

[illegible]ducer Lorne Michaels recruits almost the entire cast of Saturday Night Live for this extended comedy sketch. As with the NBC show, the scenes range from riotous to bland. After a crash landing, the Coneheads, Beldar (Dan Aykroyd) and Prymaat (Jane Curtin), make the best of suburbia among the "bluntskulls" in Paramus, NJ. Life is surprisingly human: they run the family business, face marital problems, and help their teenage daughter through school and dating. On Saturdays they relax and "consume mass quantities" at the backyard barbecue. Curiously, no one seems to mind their cone heads: the community accepts them as the ideal family. If only people in real life could be so open-minded.

M.R.D'ENTREMONT

Hotshot Harvard Law School grad Mitch McDeere (Tom Cruise) makes a deal with the devil and to extricate himself goes up against his new law firm, the Mafia, and the FBI. Director Sydney Pollack establishes character and motive with declsive sledgehammer blows, but there's little build-up and suspense. The movie aspires to literary heights but only succeeds at seeming pretentlous. What lively moments it has are thanks to a motley assortment of quirky low-lives: Gary Busey as a good-natured private eye, Holly Hunter as a good-hearted tootsle; David Strathairn as Mitch's droll jailbird brother Ray, and Ed Harris as a bullying, hot-headed FBI agent.

K.WILSON

THE FUGITIVE

The Fugitive is quintessential Harrison Ford. No one cracks nervous jokes while under fire quite the way Ford does, and since the part of Doctor Kimble, the film's protagonist, calls for a lot of that, it fits Ford like a glove. As the falsely convicted killer of his beloved wife, he wins our sympathy. As the escapee pursuing his wife's killer, he wins our admiration. And as a daredevil fugitive who risks life and limb to evade hard-headed but good-humored lawman Tommy Lee Jones, he wins our attention. Our attention drifts though, as the spectacular action/chase scenes are replaced by dry details of Kimble's investigation. We are too prepared for the ending, which winds down in trite anti-climactic fight scenes.

M.R.D'ENTREMONT

Wolfgang Peterson directs this exciting, coherent, and often humorous action thriller starring Clint Eastwood as Secret Service Agent Frank Horrigan, a "borderline burnout with questionable social skills" who still feels guilty that he didn't protect JFK that day in Dallas. Frank gets a second chance compliments of rogue CIA operative and would-be-Presidential-assassin Mitch Leary (John Malkovich) who engages Frank in a game of cat and mouse. Renee Russo is good as career Secret Service Agent Lilly Raines and Frank's love interest. Almost over-the-hill Frank is less believable as Lily's love interest even if he does adore jazz, play the piano and grin disarmingly after making chauvinist remarks.

K.WILSON

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts – and there are many – don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. The only entertaining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs running amuck in Jurassic Park and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill, and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

K.WILSON

Virginia Woolf's Orlando, about the time-traveling adventures of a man, who awakens transformed into a woman, is more engaging than its original readers would concede. Orlando the movie is empty, empty, despite the poetic passages and ethereal cinematography and the heaps of devotees who find Consequence and Importance just at the places where Woolf's readers found all style and no content. Potter can't direct and, worse for the high humor of Woolf's Orlando, she certainly can't direct comedy. On the other hand, Quentin Crisp, pioneering gay activist for The Naked Civil Servant, makes a prim and perfectly rouged Queen Elizabeth I.

G. PEARY

No trouble sleeping here. A young boy from Seattle, Jonah Baldwin (Ross Malinger), phones a radlo talk show and says his widowed dad needs a new wife. A woman in Baltimore, Annie Reed (Meg Ryan), becomes obsessed with the young caller and his father Sam (Tom Hanks) and realizes that she and her fiancé are mismatched. The premise is clever but the plot is rehashed. We get two hours of amusing, but all-too-familiar, "Will they (meet) or won't they?" Annie loses interest in her fiancé because there are no surprises in their relatlonship. Ditto our reaction to this movie. Still, Hanks and Ryan are great. Maybe next time they could do two scenes together.

SEAN ALSO RISES

"...Far from indulging in Japan bashing, the movie portrays the Japanese as worthy adversaries..."

Rising Sun opens definitively with a warrior's cry, a drum beat, and bold, red Kanji characters. A declaration of war? No, director Philip Kaufman is playing with us. He indulges our expectations that the movie version of Michael Crichton's novel will be a white hat versus black belt, U.S.-Japanese knockdown-dragout fight, then immediately subverts them with a jumble of East-meets-Western video images that recall Akira Kurosawa's Yojimbo (about a sword-slinging samurai for hire) and Sergio Leone's spaghetti Western Fistful of Dollars (which was based on Yojimbo). We're in a karaoke bar and a cool young Japanese man, and his two cool, back-up thugs sing Don't Fence Me In, the lyrics "Give me land, lots of land..." an ironic commentary on our own past and Japan's present Eastward Ho economic expansion. To the mix, Kaufman adds a beautiful, slinky woman in a black, strapless dress who resembles the ravishing Rita Hayworth from Gilda. The woman walks out on the young man. He follows and threatens her. The two drive off in his expensive red sports car.

Sempai-Fi: Sean Connery asLAPD Special Services Liason and self proclaimed sempai (teacher / elder) John Connor.

The scene is fast, slick, confusing, and intriguing. It's riddled with clues about who's who and what's to come. Remarkably Kaufman keeps it up for the rest of the movie, engaging us while he confounds us.

SCREENPLAY BY: Philip Kaufman, Michael Crichton and Michael Backes.
Based on the book by Michael Crichton.

Soon the beautiful blonde is sprawled on the Nakamoto Corporation's boardroom table. Is her death an accident (kinky sex gone awry) or murder? Does it have anything to do with Japanese attempts to acquire the U.S.-based MicroCon Corporation? Is she a victim of Japanese gang warfare? (Figuring out the gang relationships is nearly impossible.) Nothing is as it appears. Advanced Japanese laser disk technology holds the key to the so-called truth, even as it conceals it.

The movie is less a whodunit than a Japanese mystery tour set in L.A. with semi-retired LAPD special services liaison officer John Connor (Sean Connery) as guide. A self-proclaimed sempai (teacher/elder), Connor teaches by example and interprets the meaning and nuances of Japanese behavior and protocol for fellow-officer and kohai (acolyte) Web Smith (Wesley Snipes). Smith is bright and reluctantly accepts Connor's wisdom. He's also one of us: ignorant, confused and easily gulled. For Smith, the mystery tour turns into an inner journey.

Far from indulging in Japan bashing, the movie portrays the Japanese as worthy adversaries. If they are winning, it's because they play the game better and because their history and tradition give them a competitive edge.

Rising Sun also explores corporate culture, which is, above all, a man's world. The movie offers gleaming skyscrapers, kung fu face-offs, and artful, fantasy sex. Kaufman portrays Japanese business as an ancient, old-boy network that uses tradition to support expediency and perquisites such as fast cars, hot tubs, and secret sex houses. Japanese and American men aren't so different after all. They all want the same things.

Most of the women in the movie are prostitutes. Tia Carrere as a half-Japanese, half-black computer guru (Carrere is Hawaiian and Philippine) is an exception. She's an active truth seeker and the love interest in a triangle which includes Connor and Smith. Yet she's a mystery. Is she a trap? Or is she Smith's guide to self-knowledge, his escape from that all-American, red, white and blue, me-first freedom that fences so many of us in? ❑

FROM HOLLYWOOD TO HANOI

"...Tiana is more a seeker than a probing analytical, photojournalist..."

Filmmaker Tiana Thi Thianh Nga ("Tiana") rarely conformed to the wishes of her Vietnamese-American parents. Their version of the American Dream included the hope that she'd be a scientist or computer analyst, choosing as respectable a profession as had her two brothers, who are San José, California cops. Instead, Tiana stormed Hollywood and made her mark starring in cheap Karate movies as a high-kicking, female Bruce Lee.

But for any Asian American, there's the knowledge that there's more to life than Asian stereotypes in crude "B" or "C" movies. In 1988, flying in the face of her family's resolute embargo of their former country, Tiana decided to make a documentary in post-war Communist Vietnam.

Once privileged and wealthy in Saigon (her father was director of press relations for the South Vietnamese government), the Nga family left for America in 1968, a step ahead of Ho Chi Minh. Today, they remain intractable. With the Communists in power in Vietnam, they'll never stray from San José.

Except for Tiana, who ventured off to make From Hollywood to Hanoi.

The film's first stop is in Saigon, where her ex-childhood home has been taken over by a family with Lenin posters on the wall. Despite Communist rule, the city seems genuinely buoyant, with western-style things to do. Tiana attends a histrionic stage performance of The Glass Menagerie, and then ventures to a hot disco where two of Saigon's most revered aging movie stars — the "Vietnamese Elizabeth Taylor" and the "Vietnamese Clark Gable"— dance the night away.

Tiana's documentary picks up emotion during a meeting with a group of ragamuffin, half-breed "Amerasians:" illegitimate, illiterate, and begging to come to the U.S.A. and search down their GI dads. And on the road to Hanoi, Tiana stops at what was once My Lai, and listens as the forever traumatized survivors (all two of them) describe again that day in 1968 when Lieutenant Calley and his band of American "liberators" came to town and massacred 370 civilian men, women, and children.

Finally, Tiana reaches Hanoi — Hades, as far as her family is concerned. She meets with once-enemy Vietnamese leaders, they trade poems, and she returns home, strangely hopeful, with plans for more visits to Vietnam. Since returning from her still-ravaged former homeland, she's started the Indochina Film Arts Foundation to encourage cinematic exchange between the two countries.

In her own film, Tiana is more a seeker than a probing, analytical photojournalist. What she reveals is mostly anecdotal, lightly personal, and the cinematography for her first-time feature is quite pedestrian. Nevertheless, we must be pleased that Tiana has braved such an ambitious Vietnamese trip. What more irresistible an experience for viewers than to be taken along the Ho Chi Minh Trail, marching towards mysterious Hanoi, sharing the experiences of someone who is returning to a land that must be at once familiar and utterly foreign?

THE SECRET GARDEN

Frances Hodgson Burnett's 1911 children's novel, The Secret Garden, has attracted generations of young girl devotees touched by the emotional story of a lonely, grouchy orphan, a child who gains self-esteem in the process of tending and restoring an overgrown secret garden. Spiritual, ecological, with creepy Victorian, Brontëesque trappings (also a ripe Freudian subtext), The Secret Garden is a natural for a 1990's movie.

There's much to like about this current adaptation. Roger Deakins (Barton Fink) is a master cameraman, and his shots of English moors and Gothic stairwells are truly extraordinary. The Secret Garden is a "winner": properly lush, sensual, and genuinely Edenic. And Polish director Agnieszka Holland brings to the film some of the magic and intelligence of her European classics, Europa Europa and Olivier Olivier.

The children are the problem with the film. Presumably, they read well and looked right when cast, but Kate Maberly (Mary), Heydon Prowse (Colin), and Andrew Knott (Dickon) lack emotional depth and acting range, keeping The Secret Garden from being little more than a good children's art movie. ❑

Waking Up To Your Dream Job

How to recognize the perfect career – or perfect career change – for you.

Landing your dream job is a three-step process: (1) Figure out which activities interest you the most; (2) Figure out if there's an employer who actually pays people to do these activities; and (3) Noogie that employer until he or she offers you the job, benefits, company car, company yacht (tighten headlock), and the shiny new shoes he or she is wearing. It's that easy. You almost don't need 630 more words of HELPFUL SUB-STEPS, but my editor said "No way."

Figuring Out Interests

- Ask yourself, "Whose job do I most desire?" suggests Richard Bolles in his perennial best-seller What Color Is Your Parachute? And what is it about that job? The malleable schedule? The power to make George Weeter cry for his job? These questions serve as shortcuts to your career interests in that they translate general inklings into a tangible job-title.

- Tap into childhood dreams. This tip comes from Edward Colozzi, a nationally-practiced career counselor based in the Boston area. Ed admits that this tip sounds syrupy sweet but insists "You can learn a lot about your interests from the way you used to answer the classic question 'What do you want to be when you grow up?'" If you aspired to sing for a band, then perhaps you'd flourish in a job that kept you in the spotlight, or allowed you to communicate with large numbers of people. If you always wanted to be a lawyer, then perhaps you'd (insert favorite lawyer joke).

- Visualize your dream job. Are you in a three-piece power suit, seated behind an expansive desk, with lots of people groveling around you? Or are you in a skin-tight wet suit, diving into the clear Caribbean water, with lots of people groveling around you?

- How would you spend your days if... you were independently wealthy, you couldn't fail at whatever you chose to do, and both your family and friends would always support you in your decision. "Finally you get to decide what you want to do and not what you feel pressured into doing," beams Ed. Think about activities that you've enjoyed doing in the past. Rock climbing? Perusing through art museums in Paris? You don't have to give these interests order and purpose yet; just let them come.

Finding Out a Career for Interests

Time for order and purpose. Now that you've tallied your basic interests, the next step is to apply these interests to a salaried career. Granted, this step seems like a doozy, but there's a myriad of careers out there – approximately 22,000 according to Ed, who counted. Here are some resources:

- Your local library can help focus your career choices through reference books such as The Encyclopedia of Careers and Vocational Guidance and Offbeat Careers: The Directory of Unusual Work.

- Your college career center has addresses of working grads who pant at the opportunity to explain the career they've chosen, why they've chosen it, why they should've been chosen Senior "Class King," how they dropped the touchdown pass during the homecoming game, why they....

- The United States Employment Services has branches statewide which offer, by appointment, free services not only including career counseling and interest testing, but also job training, interview assistance and access to the Interstate Job Bank, a database boasting 45,000 job opportunities nationwide, ranging from entry-level ($7.50 per hour, or higher) to senior executive (you don't want to know).

- Career counselors are chock full of job-search catalysts. The "Myers-Briggs Type Indicator" test logs your interests through personality-related questions (i.e. Do you make decisions based on logic or feeling?) while the Strong Vocational Interest Inventory assesses your work-related interests, and then aligns you with careers being enjoyed by people with similar interests. Some counselors even have access to "Sigi Plus" software which translates your eclectic interests right down to the daily tasks of a specific job-title. Not bad for something named "Sigi Plus."

- Short-term temping affords you an inside glance at your career possibility without the full-time commitment. As does an internship, which shouldn't be mocked just because it lacks a bullet and bold-type – some pay over $400 a week. See the book Internships 1993 for listings.

DIFFA lights up Boston with a message of hope and awareness.

Design Industries Foundation for AIDS (DIFFA) second Light up the Night event delivered a powerful message of hope for a world living with AIDS. Last Saturday people from all walks of life gathered to "light up the night" with candles, houselights, flashlights, etc., in support and awareness for the fight against HIV/AIDS.

The events included an afternoon radio broadcast on 94.5 FM from Tower Records and a candlelight stroll down Newbury St. Restaurants in the area, such as Biba and Isabella's, served desserts whose proceeds were donated to DIFFA.

Additionally, Avalon hosted a concert sponsored by Absolut Vodka. Bands Maelstrom, Chucklehead, and Chuck contributed their energy in a display of groove, funk, and rap.

At a party at the Boston Design Center, DIFFA awarded a grant for $5,000 to the Foundation for Children with AIDS. Two other grants, one a $10,000 to the Boston's Children's AIDS project and another $5,000 to Boston Pediatric AIDS project, were awarded at a rally at Copley Square Park. Here hundreds of people gathered to listen to a candlelight concert that included several moving vocal performances by the member of Today's Youth Tomorrow's World, the New Hope Baptist Church Choir, and the all-girl, teen rap group ED'E.

At 9:00 PM, Marilyn Stahl, founder of Light up the Night, began the lighting ceremony at Copley, passing the flame from one candle to another as a unifying symbol of her message that "we are all affected even if we are not all infected." All present joined in song to such heart-felt pieces as "We Dream a Brighter Day" and "You're not Alone." The brilliant candle of hope formed by the Prudential Building lights created an inspiring back-drop for those nestled together at the Square, as well as for all of Boston.

Heads Up

Find great buys for everything from head to toe at this discount beauty supply boutique. Mason Pearson brushes selling elsewhere for $50, are here at $41.95. Fancy hair accessories showcased at upscale specialty stores like headbands, bows, clips, and special occasion pieces with prices usually from $20-$75, here $11.95 to $30. Many make-up lines and skin care products from lines like Ultima II and Lancome are discounted. For applying all your favorite products, the Grumbacher Cosmetic Brushes are great and are available in sable, red fox and other natural materials. There are exceptional buys on fragrances; new selections from Krizia, Balmain, Guerlain, Byblos, Carolina Herrera, and old stand-bys that have been discontinued by more promotional stores, such as Halston, Oscar de la Renta, Opium and L'Air du Temps, are discounted at 15 to 20% off. Men's fragrances, soaps, and club brushes are also popular. Bath products like brushes and sponges, and products from Perlier, Vitabath, Caswell Massey, and Kniepp are all marked down. Need something to put your stuff in? Try a Christian Dior or Nipon cosmetic bag. The sister location of this beauty supply store is a salon in Brookline called Tresses, etc. where you can get discounted exceptional hair products: Nexus, Sorbe, Framesi, Joico, Sebastian, Redken Le Coupe, and Rene Furterer. Tints, hennas, perms, and straighteners from Clairol and L'Oréal are available in both stores and are all discounted. Best buys of all are the house brands by Charisma (very popular with models).

Hearth and Home

Abode, the brain child of Maureen Daly and Ron Roesch, gives us a wonderful eclectic selection of furniture and bric-a-brac. A fabulous, lightly-stained mahogany pier cabinet in the French style, including lighting, is $2,950, while a mirrored-door armoire with space large enough for a TV, and storage in the four small drawers, is $1,795. Blown glass contemporary urns in black wrought iron stands of varying sizes run $49-$95. Check out the glassware, new and old: delicately etched pieces from France to large hand-blown glass vessels. A drop-leaf table with Jacobean legs was elegant and priced well at $450. A fanciful pine game table with a game board carved in the center is substantial enough to hold court in a big room with a large sofa, and is priced at $495. A set of armless Queen Anne chairs for $855 were a great buy. Also in the chair department, look for the cherry lyre-back dining chairs with needlepoint seats; set of six for $595. Carved country animals abound in the store, well-priced from $30-$150. The store has a great selection of candlesticks in glass, pewter, brass, copper, and wrought iron, lamps from $59, ornamental boxes from $8-$95. The owners also offer a selection of hand-painted furniture and will do custom work. Selection is always changing, as pieces are hand-selected by the owners, with a majority of items being sought out in England.

Design Difference

If you have been looking for inspiration to enable you to turn your apartment or condo into a comfortable space, perhaps it is design inspiration that you need. A small firm in Boston is working towards perfecting the client's existing ideas and goals. A space may be practical and unique, and at the same time affordable. For a limited time, an initial consultation is at no charge. This provides a meeting with the designer in your space to discuss the content of the project and sort out some of the solutions. There is no standard method for computing fees because there is no standard job. The fees will be based on the scope of services needed for the individual project. For example, a job consists of: a) developing the design concept; b) determining the budget; c) purchasing all furnishings, accessories and custom items. Fee arrangements are: a flat fee for design concepts (no charge if you mention this column); a flat fee to develop the required budget which will be credited to the client's account; or there will be a percentage mark-up on cost for major and custom items; minor items are at retail prices. A simple and direct design package has been developed for those projects involved in new construction or remodeling. The package consists of fifteen hours of service, which includes client meetings, design selections, and coordinating all selections with builders and contractors. The price is $750. Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indeed, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confident in this, rest assured it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a place so completely and utterly removed from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner market or delicatessen.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for adventure. Perhaps now we know how they quenched it.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

SECRETS OF THE SELLER

Having trouble deciding on just the right wine for your soireé? Look no further, it's the knowledgeable sommelier to the rescue!

In our incessant striving to bring you, the wine consumer, the benefit of the most advanced scientific research techniques, a crack team of Improper Bostonian field workers recently initiated a week-long foray into the city's seven most renowned restaurants. The goal: to report on the vaunted new breed of professional sommelier and explain, if at all possible, how they arrive at the daring wine recommendations which dazzle their clientele. Our hope was to unlock once and for all the arcane secrets of how to match wine and food. Brief excerpts of the most salient points which emerged during this gastronomic odyssey follow:

Sunday. "Yes, I'm at a total loss. I'll be having the Spit Roasted Mogolian Yak Flank with Filbert Chutney, and my guest the Barbados Jerk Tuna Balls in Basil Chantilly. I'm in your hands completely. What would you recommend?"

"Chardonnay. Definitely." Succinct and to the point, I thought. His was the decisive voice of a true professional.

"And which one is your very best?"

"Ah, 'the best'," he laughed. "We're out of stock; also of the second, third, fourth, and fifth. But I might still be able to find a bottle of the one tied for sixth if you place your order now."

Who could help but admire his forthrightness?

Monday. "I've got a real challenge for you. What do you suggest that goes with the Baccala Alla Carbonera as well as the Porchenoi Ciccolatto?"

"Chardonnay. The Skippy."

This puzzled me. "But I've had that. Isn't it a tad soft and creamy?"

"They make two. I'm recommending the Cuvee Chunky which is a lot more...crunchy."

Tuesday. "Which wine do you..."

"Chardonnay. Pardon my abruptness, but it's busy tonight."

He brought a bottle of the Quik Stop Modesto, Holding Tank Number 23. I later learned that this acclaimed master of the corkscrew had once championed his squad to victory in the G.E. College Bowl.

Wednesday. "Would you recommend a good Gewurztraminer to complement the Curried Garlic Relish en Croute, perhaps this vintage of the Fershtunkeneh Dumkopf?"

"Oh, no! You must have the Chardonnay. It's absolutely..." He broke off and kissed his fingers.

This time it was a bottle of the Dejá Vu Grande Reserve. The sage of the cellar was right. It was "absolutely..."

Thursday. By now I was beginning to catch on. A subtle pattern had begun to emerge from the disparate bits of information I had gleaned.

"Which Chardonnay would you recommend?"

"The Chardonnay de la Treize de la Maze, Nouvelle-Nouveau Vat Numero One."

"And why?"

"It's hedonic and gooey with Raphael-esque globs of opulent layers on the lewd finish. And so expensively yummy."

"Is there something a bit less sexy?"

"The Powerhouse. It's big and complicated. And, of course, it's the fullest-bodied wine on our list. And it's good. Real good. And dry."

Friday. "I think I know what the answer will be. I'm having Hare Shanks with the Blueberry Rhubarb Risotto. Is there a wine that will stand up?"

"Personally, I'd recommend a Chardonnay. Formula Mountain, Dirty Ridge, Stage 12, they're all excellent. But if you'd like to try something a bit unusual and delightfully different, there's this new wine we just got in from, I think it's France, the Macon-Lugny."

Saturday. "I'm having a Chardonnay. Is there any dish, in your professional opinion, that I shouldn't order with it?"

"The Chicken Chardonnay. There's simply no affinity; the chef uses Golden Chablis in the sauce."

And since it was date night, why not cap off the week with a dessert wine? When challenged to produce a complement to the signature Cochon À la Mode, the sommelier responded without hesitation by suggesting our versatile favorite. I was taken aback.

"A Chardonnay? Even for dessert?"

"Well, first, it's the driest dessert wine we have." He put his hand on my shoulder and lowered his voice so as not to cause me further embarrassment. "But most important," he continued, "it's the coldest."

How do they do it? Like an artist who cannot put into words the sources of his creative inspiration, the sommelier can never fully explain his secrets. The skills are acquired and honed over decades of familiarity not only with the evolution of cuisine but also with the world's premier wine producing districts. As one proud proprietor confided, "I've been in business forty years and I'll tell you, you can't teach this at all. It's a talent that only the great ones are born with." Audacious, daring, unfettered by tradition; bravo the new breed of sommelier!

Sandy Block was awarded the title Master of Wine in 1992 by the prestigious British Institute of Masters of Wine. Of the 162 people worldwide who hold this title, only five are Americans. Sandy is also the on-premise wine manager of The Branded-New England Company in Norwood.

APPETEASERS

Rib Festivals, Seaport Festivals and a unique new restaurant find.

THEY'RE BACK!

Last year, if you braved the rain and the Bundy look-alike contest, chances are you sampled some excellent ribs at the Great Yankee Rib Cook-Off. Now they're back! Over 30 restaurants and barbeque pitmasters will be serving up a variety of ribs, pulled pork, smoked beef brisket, and more as the Cook-Off returns to City Hall Plaza on August 26-29. The restaurants will be competing for the "Best Ribs" title and $10,000 in prize money. The cook-off also offers a music festival featuring Buster Poindexter, Lesley Gore, and the Heavy Metal Horns, as well as a nightly laser show (every night except Sunday). Admission tickets are available at the door only, and are $2 afternoons until 4 p.m. and $4 from 4 p.m. until closing. Beer and wine will be available. Call the Rib line at (617) 267-RIBS for more information and don't let us catch you licking your fingers.

MICROBREWERY BBQ NIGHT:
Michael Solomon of Silver Restaurant Supply holds a toast with host Michael Gillien of Michael's Waterfront and Sterling Dunn of Branded Whitehall

JUICY DETAILS

Looking for change, Steve Rose has left the Commonwealth Brewing Co. and is currently teaming up with the Village Smokehouse to enter competition at the Great Yankee Rib Cook-Off. Don Levy has sold the Loading Zone. Marcella's on Appleton Street in the South End has closed. Frank Fox, the owner, was going after a full liquor license and the neighborhood association vowed to fight, so he closed up shop. Gone are the days of a $7.95 steak and a $7 bottle of wine. In the lost and found department, Penny Dincauze has been found at the Blacksmith House Cafe and Bakery in Cambridge. Sal Tecci has opened Cafe Rubino at 266 Newbury Street. Jim Fahey of Mexican Cuisine and the Porterhouse Cafe has started to bottle two of his own sauces. One is a very hot sauce called Liquid Sky and the other (we don't have a name yet) is a special barbeque sauce. Jim won Best Sauce at the Rib Cook-Off last year. And a hearty congratulations to Diane and Mark Gallagher on opening the Union Square Bistro on Bow Street in Somerville.

BY THE SEA...

The first annual Boston Seaport Festival will take place at Pier 1 in the Charlestown Navy Yard on August 19-22. The festival will highlight Boston's maritime heritage and will feature seafood, live music, and classic sailing vessels. The restaurants offering their best will include Skipjack's, Legal Seafoods, and The Blue Room.

TABLE TALK

Geoffrey's Cafe has just opened their second restaurant in Hamersley's old location on Tremont Street. A new cafe called the Left Bank will be replacing Rebecca's Cafe in Harvard Square. The Rebecca's Cafe on Boylston has also closed but will soon reappear in October inside the new Prudential Center. Il Capriccio in Waltham is rumored to be looking for a new location. The Original Sports Saloon has almost completed its expansion. Meanwhile, Gyuhama, home of Rock 'n Roll Sushi, will soon have its own expansion on track as they take over the vacant space next door.

Great Day Cafe on Canal Street is currently serving breakfast and lunch in an upscale diner atmosphere. They hope to start serving dinner soon. Mineo Ristorante is now serving dinner in the southern Italian style on Prince Street in the North End. Anthony's Pier 4 now has outdoor dining on the patio so one can catch some rays and enjoy the sea breeze – better hurry before summer ends. And finally, the Back Bay Restaurant Group has purchased the Barnside Restaurant in Hanover.

POPPA & GOOSE

By chance, we stumbled upon a unique restaurant on First Street in Cambridge, across from the Cambridgeside Galleria. The restaurant is called Poppa & Goose and its mission is to promote cultural awareness through culinary tradition. The cuisine is mostly Vietnamese with touches of Japanese, Thai, and Chinese. The food is very fresh and great attention is paid to using healthy ingredients. Poppa & Goose also offers cooking lessons by volunteers and the market inside the restaurant carries all the ingredients necessary to make the dishes at home. There is even a small library filled with cookbooks and culinary magazines for browsing. Call 497-6772 for more information. ❑

Dining Review / Sandy Block

A True Classic

A "Riot of Flavors" makes Icarus shine

Fine art always strikes me as effortless, natural, and uncontrived. Through the creator's passion and skill I am transported outside the awareness of the theater and into the drama onstage. While hearing the music, viewing the painting, or following the story, I may lose myself for a moment.

This is the exact context in which I experience dining at Icarus. Leaving the South End's Appleton Street and descending the wide staircase into the restaurant's subterranean dining room is, for me, like entering another realm: at once visually exciting but also dreamlike and warm. What sets this restaurant apart, though, is not just the appeal and comfort of its archetypically urban design, the graceful professionalism of the staff, or the brilliance of the cuisine, but rather how all of these are in harmony. Everything works together. This is a self-assured restaurant which has the class to do what it does so well without even a hint of pretense or glitter.

IF YOU GO

Icarus

3 Appleton Street
Boston
439-3995

This is all well and good, but food is the supreme reason to visit Icarus again and again. Chef Chris Douglass turns out consistently superb dinners true to their largely native ingredients. His creations always express subtleties of texture and flavor and strive for balance rather than razzle-dazzle. My favorite is a deliciously crisp but still-juicy and aromatic grilled shrimp with a cool and aristocratically tart, sweet and bitter mango jalapeno sorbet.

The gorgonzola, escarole, walnut and grape pizzetta also presents a series of texture and flavor juxtapositions which flow seamlessly together. The barely wilted, still-crunchy escarole, fleshy warm fruit and velvety, pungent but unabrasive cheese seem at first an unlikely combination. But Icarus inspires you with trust in its judgment, and when the dish arrives it is so delightful that you wonder why this combination had not been created earlier.

Another appetizer which showed great finesse was the roasted littlenecks in tomato, garlic and oregano with a superb crisp risotto cake. The seafood was cooked just enough to add a toasted note to its mild, delicate flavors while the slightly simmered tomato's sweetness and the crisp risotto added nuance and life.

If Icarus has a signature dish it is Douglass's cake-like polenta with braised exotic mushrooms. Here creamy, crunchy, earthy, pungent, salty and sweet tastes are married in beautiful harmony.

The entrees are no less inspired or inspiring. A roasted chicken breast stuffed with parmesan, artichoke, risotto, and proscuitto presented a visual feast, garnished as it was with sweet roasted red peppers. It was an extraordinary dish, set off to perfection by a cool, minerally Michel Redde Sancerre whose grapefruity acids added another dimension to the riot of flavors.

The duck with tart dried cherries and cracked black pepper was served over a crisp julienne of potatoes. Again, there was a lovely match among the sweetness of the duck, the peppery flavors and the sour cherries.

It is astounding to me that this critically acclaimed restaurant is not jammed every night, but perhaps the local diner prefers to have his palate flambéed by bolder, more exotic and strongly flavored fare. To each his own, but it would be a pity indeed if Bostonians became so jaded in their tastes that an appreciation of subtlety and restraint in dining were lost. Icarus does not blow you away, but then again, a true classic is not supposed to. ❑

WARREN TAVERN,
2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, 241-8142
Take a step back into history this Sunday, 212 years. The Warren Tavern is the oldest tavern in the country and the first place to be rebuilt after Charlestown burned down in the Battle of Bunker Hill. The Tavern features an original decor of low beamed ceilings, church pew benches and a 25 ft. oak bar. Cuisine is straight forward American with a little international flair. Brunch from noon to 3:30 p.m. $4.95 - $6.95.

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

LATE NIGHT ERUPTIONS

". . .A Cappuccino and a calzone go a long way towards stabilizing your metabolism in the wee hours. . ."

It's late, 2:00, maybe 2:30 a.m., and you've been out all night at some restless club, last call has been called, you haven't made any big scores, you're bored enough to spit, and you're still so wound up that you couldn't possibly go home now. You can't find any evidence of after hours parties, the guy you've been talking to suddenly leaves with another woman, and you're starving. What to do? You need someplace where the action will continue, at least for a little while, and probably some food and a few cups of espresso in your booze-filled bod wouldn't hurt either.

Under The Volcano:
Late night life in the North End

Caffe Pompeii is the answer. After 2 a.m., when everyone starts trickling out of the bars and clubs, they head over to Pompeii in the North End. The caffe is open till 4 a.m., although they stop serving liquor at 1:30 a.m. or so, a fact which can be both negative and positive. Negative because drinkus interruptus sometimes results in frighteningly abrupt sobriety, causing the rosy hue of the evening to dull somewhat. Positive because you now have a chance to minimize the extent of your hangover tomorrow. A cappuccino and a calzone go a long way towards stabilizing your metabolism in the wee hours.

IF YOU GO

CAFFE POMPEII
280 Hanover Street
523-9438
Open 8:00 am - 4:00 am

On a good night, so many people head over to Pompeii après-club, that there's a wait outside. You wait and wait, and at random intervals, someone who doesn't exactly look like he works there, but nonetheless seems to be in charge, comes out and asks how many in your party. After getting the answer, he usually wanders off to chat with some of the ever-present neighborhood boys leaning on one of the parked cars out front, leaving you to wonder if you're ever going to get inside. But eventually, you get in, you sit at a teeny cafe table and push the remains of someone else's cannoli out of your way, and settle back to watch the show.

Pompeii attracts a highly arbitrary and unusual mix of people, especially between 3 and 4 a.m. That's when the true die-hards arrive, looking for caffeine and a piece of the parade that streams through. On a recent Saturday night, while I was trying to discourage the attempts of someone who didn't seem at all to mind that he was holding an entirely one-sided conversation, two young ladies came in who, I was informed, had just gotten out of work, said work consisting of taking all their clothes off and doing physically challenging things for the bargain price of a buck.

Seated at another table were three gentlemen who could have been extras in The Godfather, muttering darkly to each other and their espressos through a swirl of smoke. Several tables of ultra-chic Euro kids kept having to stand up and repeatedly kiss everyone who came by, a formality that, while aesthetically pleasing, must let your cappuccino get cold awfully fast. Neighborhood Italian kids filed endlessly past, yelling (everyone in the North End is very loud), and I managed to make a late night acquaintance who saved me from the babbler on the other side of me. For tiramisu, cappuccino, and a whole lot more, there's no place like the volcano. ❑

BAR & CLUB LISTINGS

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

GENERAL

BEACON HILL PUB
49 Charles St., Bos, C-5. A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, C-6. A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

CACTUS CLUB
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, C-5. Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

THE LITTLEST BAR
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

MARKET PLACE CAFE
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, B-7. In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m. Live music nightly during outdoor cafe season. Casual atmosphere and dress.

PROVINCE STREET PUB
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, C-7. Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m.. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

THREE CHEERS RESTAURANT & BAR
290 Congress St., 423-6166
Located on Boston's scenic waterfront overlooking the historic Boston Tea Party Ship. Featuring Kareoke, comedy great music and more! When looking for a fun night out, don't miss the Mystery Café Dinner Theater. Function facilities, free parking. Just 1/4 of a block from the Children's and Computer Museums. Lunch Mon.-Sat. 11:30-4 p.m., Dinner Mon.-Sat. 4-11 p.m., Brunch Sun. 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Mystery Café Dinner Theater Wed., Thurs., Fri., 7 p.m.; Sat. 6 & 9 p.m., Sun. 6 p.m.

WARREN TAVERN
241-8142, 2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, B-5. A funky little bar whose clientele includes young professionals & athletes. Also claims to attract Boston's most beautiful women (?!) Local celebs don't mind hanging out at the tavern because no one bothers them. TV is always on for sports. Tuesday nights: Susan Tedeschi, 8:30-midnight; Wednesday nights: Inquiring Minds, 8:30-midnight; Thursday nights: Live jazz, rock and blues. No tank tops. Bring ID. Please don't drink and drive.

POP/JAZZ/ BLUES/REGGAE

CANTAB LOUNGE
354-2685, 738 Massachusetts Ave., Camb, B-4. This little hole-in-the-wall in Central Square attracts a wide and surprising mix of clientele. The Cantab's claim to fame is Little Joe Cook and the Thrillers on Fris. and Sats. performing such favorites as "Sexy Lady from the Beauty Shop," a local classic. Other live acts perform throughout the week. Karaoke on Wednesdays. Cover varies. Extremely casual dress.

RATHSKELLER
536-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Boston, C-5
Affectionately known as the Rat, this is a rock club with staying power. Past headliners have included the Police, 10,000 Maniacs, and R.E.M. The RAt attracts a hard-core alternative crowd - lots of black leather and biker jackets. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs.

WESTERN FRONT
492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb, B-4. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the Rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. On Sunday nights, visit the Arts Café and enjoy music, comedy, performance art and poetry for only $5. Casual dress.

DANCING

AVALON
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, D-5. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

AVENUE C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, C-6. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

PIANO ROOMS

MONDAY'S PIANO BAR
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline, D-3. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

BREWERIES

COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, B-7. "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

IRISH

BLACK ROSE
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, C-7. Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

THE GREEN BRIAR
304 Washington St., Brighton 789-4100
Stop in and say "Hi" to Rocky; one of the colorful characters that serve to recreate a wee bit of the old sod here in the promised land. We have entertainment Wednesday - Monday. Featuring some of Boston's best bands - Monday nights; Boston's Best Irish Sessiun - Wednesday nights; "Karaoke" prizes and giveaways. Catch all the big games here! The Green Briar also features hearty home cooked meals and a terrific Sunday Brunch. Open 7 days until 1am. Casual dress. Cover varies. T: #57 bus from Kenmore.

THE HARP AT THE GARDEN
85 Causeway St., Boston, 742-1010
Party and dance at Boston's Newest Hotspot! The Harp pleases all music lovers' tastes with rock, reggae, jazz, progressive, and, of course, Irish. We have entertainment Wed-Sun. After-work parties on Thurs. and Fri. with live entertainment and free appetizers. Featuring some of Boston's Biggest and Best Bands! Come see Boston's newest sensation—Tim Crandall "the one man band" playing Wed 7:30-10:30 and Friday Happy Hour 5-8. Food served until midnight. Pulling Boston's Best Guinness and offering weekly drink specials. Cover varies. North Station stop on the Green Line.

KINVARA PUB
34 Harvard Ave., Allston, 783-9400, C-2
If you are looking for a happening place with an Irish pub flavor, the Kinvara Pub is the place to be. The pub features some of Boston's hottest acts where dancing is the norm. Live bands Wed-Sun. Sun. night - DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served until midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled and draft beer, but the Guiness shouldn't be missed. Open 7 days a week until 2AM and ample parking In rear. Casual dress.

O'LEARY'S
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl, D-4. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

Bim Skala Bim

A Live [Album] and kicking

It's unusual for a Boston band – even on a major label, much less an indie – to release a live album. But Bim Skala Bim is not your usual band. For eight years and five albums on the septet's own BIB label, the group has sealed its reputation as Boston's king of ska – that upbeat precursor to reggae which, not coincidentally, thrives in a live club setting.

Hence, on Aug. 31, Bim Skala Bim: Live at the Paradise will be hitting record stores across the country. "We've been talking about it for years, because people ask us, 'Why not put out a live album?'," lead singer Dan Vitale said on the phone last week. "I guess we're better live than we are in the studio."

Not that Bim Skala Bim are slouches in the studio. They deftly incorporate roots rock, R&B, and reggae into a base that's unmistakably ska. "There's so many different elements in there, but it always has the groove and the dance beat," Vitale said of the music's appeal.

Regular favorites at the Paradise, Bim first recorded two full shows for the album, but Vitale said, "We just decided to pick the best one and use a whole one, to make it more like a real show."

Five songs from the set were dropped for the album to fit on one CD, but the 19 remaining tracks appear in the order of their performance on June 5, 1992. The disc includes four songs from the band's first album (out of print for six years) plus "Run Joe" and the slower "Raining and Pouring," live staples which hadn't appeared on record.

Bim Skala Bim has survived leaner years to get to the point where each album sells more than 15,000 copies, enough to roll over the investment into paying for the next project. And when Bim itself isn't busy, band members spend their time with side groups like Santa, the more roots-conscious Steady Ernest, and the non-ska Yo Yo Bookshelf Boys.

Other than a possible Strawberries in-store on the eve of the record release, Bim Skala Bim will be on tour in September and probably won't play Boston again until early October. The Paradise is now being renovated to fuel its Euro-dance club base, but don't be surprised to see Bim Skala Bim return to the scene of the crime. "They've already offered us a date, so you know we'll be in the new Paradise," Vitale said.

Elsewhere

There's no mistaking the summer's hottest show at Great Woods. Everybody seems to be sniffing around for tickets to sold-out nights of Steely Dan on Aug. 20-21. It will be the Dan's first live jaunt in nearly 20 years; the group (which broke up in 1980) was notorious for its finicky studio preference. Pianist-singer Donald Fagan and guitarist Walter Becker will be joined by guitarist Drew Zingg, saxophonists Cornelius Bumpus (ex-Doobie Bros.) and Bob Sheppard, keyboardist Warren Bernhardt, bassist Tom Barney and jazz drummer Peter Erskine (ex-Weather Report). With tickets in the growing $30 range, here's hoping that infamous perfection will yield sure results.

Another big show for Great Woods is Neil Young – not "Unplugged," not with Crazy Horse, but with soul legends the MGs and grunge-rockers Soundgarden and Blind Melon. Hope none of Neil's fans go looking for "Sugar Mountain," only to find Soundgarden's "Jesus Christ Pose." Neil's show is on Aug. 23. Aerosmith blows in for sold-out shows at Great Woods Aug. 26-27, before playing (reportedly for a few songs) at the Concert for Walden Woods at Foxboro Stadium Sept 6, with Sting, Elton John, and Melissa Etheridge also lending Don Henley a hand in saving Thoreau's sanctuary. ❑

Wish You Were Here

Venice and Hell on Six Dollars a Day

Composers need vacations too; it can't be easy, fretting about the brass section, the tone-deaf xylophonist, and the human condition for eight hours a day. But whereas most of us try to leave our work behind us – the office photocopier makes bulky carry-on luggage – composers often find that even while they're lying sun-draped on the beach or poking through gloomy foreign ruins, their minds are at work, transforming the easy life into art. For those of you desperate for escape, we've worked up a list of astonishingly cheap, gratifyingly good recordings of pieces written by composers on vacation.

If you don't want to leave these shores (because of air-sickness or a highly-demanding sense of patriotism), there's always Antonin Dvorak's famous Symphony No. 9 "From the New World," written during Dvorak's American sojourn in 1892-3. The symphony combines elements of Czech folksong, American spiritual, and classical symphonic design to produce a portrait of a panoramic young nation, a nation of bounding mountain streams and vast, hushed fields of grain. The marvelously-paced, budget-priced Kertesz performance is better than most full-priced discs (London 417 678-2; or as part of his unsurpassed set of all nine Dvorak symphonies, London 430 046-2).

Franz Liszt – you saw him in Impromptu – seems to have gone on holiday for three full years, and has provided posterity with a remarkable musical diary in his stunning compilation of piano sketches entitled "Years of Pilgrimage." Liszt starts in Switzerland, where we enjoy almost Impressionistic views of the alpine waters of the Lac du Wallenstadt. As Liszt wanders through Italy, musing on the country's religious fervor, he becomes increasingly swept up in a strange internal voyage, to the point where the Second Year ends with a sonata on the works of Dante (Dante Went To Hell And All I Got Was This Damn T Shirt.). This is perhaps the most often-heard section of the cycle, an intense, Dore-esque fantasia full of flaming gulfs and chasms and moaning souls, culminating in a tremulous vision of Beatrice in heaven. Try the splendid Jerome Rose recording on VoxBox (Vox CD3X 3004), a steal at four or five dollars a disc. Those longing for Italy should also consider Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony (No. 3).

Finally, a holiday gripe from composer Joseph Haydn, who was dragged off yearly with his orchestra to Prince Esterhazy's remote summer palace. The Prince refused to recognize the orchestra's irritation at being interminably separated from their families. Accordingly, Haydn wrote as a protest his "Farewell" Symphony (No. 45), in which, during the finale, one by one each instrumentalist stops playing, blows out his or her candle, and leaves the room, until finally only the bare orchestral pit remains, with Haydn and one violinist strumming in the dark. The Prince got the message. At mid-price, I'd recommend the Solomons recording (Sony 46507).

So enjoy a brief musical holiday. These happy little bargains should transport anyone sick of sticky suits and office coffee.

MUSEUMS

COMPUTER MUSEUM
300 Congress St., Boston
Through Sept. 6, the museum explores "From Words to Code: How People Make Computers Work," a light-hearted, interactive journey into a "land of languages." Also through Sept. 6 is "First Impressions: Digital Photography," an exhibit that allows visitors to dabble in digital paint. See R2-D2 from Star Wars in the new exhibit "Robots & Other Smart Machines." Enjoy over 100 interactive exhibits, including the award-winning Walk-Through Computer. For more details, call 423-6758.

FRANKLIN PARK ZOO
Franklin Park, Boston
Now that the weather is warm, you can enjoy both outdoor and indoor exhibits: the brand-new African Tropical Forest (leopards and gorillas), the House of Birds and the Hooves and Horns area, with zebras, llamas, horned sheep, deer and camels! Admission is only $5.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY ART MUSEUMS
32 Quincy St., Cambridge
The Busch-Resinger Museum (Northern and Central European art), the Fogg Art Museum (European and American art) and the Arthur M. Sackler Museum (ancient and Asian art) comprise Harvard's art museums. Call 495-9400 for more information.

HIGGINS ARMORY MUSEUM
100 Barber Ave., Worcester
The Armory is the only institution in the Western Hemisphere solely dedicated to arms and armor. Call (508) 853-6015 for hours and admission prices.

INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART
955 Boylston St., Boston
This museum exhibits and presents contemporary art in all media, including photography, painting, sculpture and special installations such as performance art, film, music and video. Through Oct. 17, the ICA examines various aspects of the influential black leader Malcolm X in "Malcolm X: Man, Ideal, Icon." Call 266-5151 for more information. The ICA has free admission Thursdays from 5-9 p.m.

ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER MUSEUM
280 The Fenway, Boston
Come see the permanent exhibit of primarily early Italian and Renaissance pieces at the museum. Fashioned after a 15th century Venetian palace, the Gardner holds one of the most eclectic art collections in Boston and features a quaint and open courtyard. Through Aug. 22, see "Swedish Impressionism's Boston Champion: Anders Zorn and Isabella Stewart Gardner." Call 566-1401 for more information.

JOHN F. KENNEDY LIBRARY AND MUSEUM
Columbia Point, Dorchester
This museum focuses on the political career and family heritage of President John F. Kennedy. Also, see the White House exhibition – an amazingly detailed 50' by 25' replica of the building celebrating its 200th birthday. Now you can take a water shuttle from Long Wharf (Quincy Market) to the museum. For more information call 929-4523.

MIT MUSEUM
265 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
For only a $2 donation, visitors can explore many wonderful exhibits that you don't have to be a rocket scientist to appreciate. First, there's "Crazy After Calculus: Humor at MIT," which chronicles some of the best college pranks ever committed. For the more science-minded, there's "MathSpace," a hands-on exploration of geometry that lets you tinker with math playthings.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
An art nouveau exhibit featuring the work of Klimt, Munch, Kandinsky and Bradley is on view through Oct. 3. MFA's new textile gallery is now open, featuring "From Arts and Crafts to Art Deco" through Aug. 29. MFA also presents "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Part 2" until September. Now through July 3, 1994, see "African and Oceanic Sculpture," with over 44 sculptures and masks from west and central Africa, along with some from the South Pacific. Call 267-9300.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Science Park, Boston
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (25 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle — all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Through Sept. 12. Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. ASL interpreters will be on hand July 10. Call 589-0270.

MUSEUM OF TRANSPORTATION
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Muscle Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. Call 522-6547 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM
Central Wharf, Boston
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious – and dangerous – sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200 for more information.

NEW ENGLAND SPORTS MUSEUM
Cambridgeside Galleria, Cambridge
The Sox last won the World Series in 1918 - ancient history, huh? Well, it's actually not that long ago in the scope of the NESM. This place has everything that has anything to do with New England sports, including lots of interactive exhibits - like one where you can catch a pitch thrown by Roger Clemens. The best thing is that it's open the same hours as the mall, so you can go on a weeknight and have the place all to yourself.

OLD STATE HOUSE
206 Washington St., Boston
This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

PAUL REVERE HOUSE
19 North Square, North End
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338 for more information.

THE USS CONSTITUTION MUSEUM
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

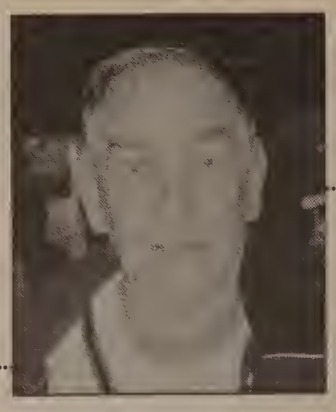
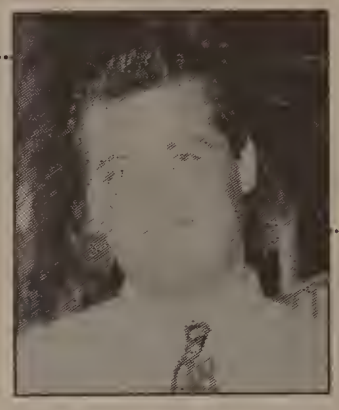
WOMAN ON THE STREET

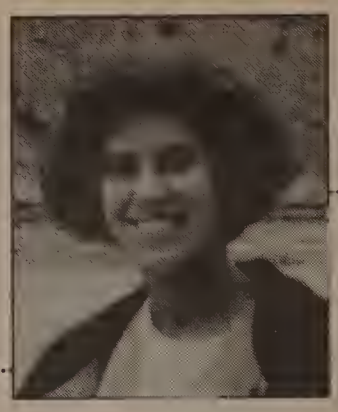
"What is your favorite breakfast cereal?"



BY LESLIE



John, 24, Dorchester
"Captain Crunch. It's the only cereal I've had that still stays crunchy in milk after 5 minutes."



Stacia, 24, S. Boston
"I like Corn Pops. You can eat them out of the box without milk and they usually have good prizes."

Dave, 62, Melrose
"Honey Nut Cheerios. They have good flavor, a lot of fiber and it's a sweet cereal that's good for you."

Eric, 28, Quincy
"Clusters. I like the squirrels running around in the commercials."

Judy, 25, Watertown
"My favorite cereal is Raisin Bran. The chewy raisins provide a nice contrast to the crispy flakes."

Virginia, 30, Peru
"Kellogg's Corn Flakes, but only if mixed with mango yogurt and not milk."

through Sept. 6. It's a mix of comedy, acrobatics, animal acts, magic and sheer theatricality; tickets range from $18-$42, with special discounts for kids under $15. Call 547-8300.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
76 Warrenton St., Boston
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work, with a celebrity guest D.J. every night. A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912 for times and ticket prices.

CHARLES PLAYHOUSE
74 Warrenton St., Boston
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, Shear Madness is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. NEW REPERTORY THEATRE
54 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands
Tickets are now on sale for the New Rep's '93-'94 season, which begins with a production of Jar the Floor from Sept. 16-Oct. 24. It's a tender, funny story of four generation of women in an African-American family preparing for the great-grandmother's 90th birthday. Call 332-1646 for more information.

NORTH SHORE MUSIC THEATRE
62 Dunham Road, Beverly
Cyd Charisse stars in the musical Grand Hotel through Aug. 21. It's about passion without reservation (yes, pun intended) in a posh, 1928 hotel in Berlin. Call 1-508-922-8500 for times and ticket reservations.

PUBLIC ALLEY 421
at Hill House
74 Joy St., Boston
The humdrum existence of a mother and son is both comically and frighteningly disrupted by a stranger's unexpected visit in the Public Alley 421 Theatre Co.'s one-act play, Pleasing Fate. Aug. 20, 21, 27, 28 at 8 p.m. and Aug. 29 at 3 p.m. Tickets are $5; call 267-2147 for more details.

SHENANDOAH SHAKESPEARE EXPRESS
Boston Center for the Arts
549 Tremont St., Boston
Wherefore art thou if you're not seeing these guys perform? See their innovative interpretations of Romeo and Juliet (Aug. 20 & 22), A Midsummer Night's Dream (Aug. 20, 21, 22) and Antony and Cleopatra (Aug. 21). Tickets are $15; call 931-2000 or the BCA box office for reservations.

TERRACE ROOM
Park Plaza Hotel, Boston
Forever Plaid, a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this summer will be for Miss Saigon, the tragic love story of an American G.I. and the Vietnamese woman he left in Saigon. It's a must-see, but it's only here until Oct. 9. Call 931-2222 for times and ticket prices.

LECTURES/READINGS

T.T. THE BEAR'S PLACE
10 Brookline St.
Central Square, Cambridge

CRYSTAL BLUE BEADING CO.
565 Mt. Auburn St., Watertown
An exhibition of Yoruba African Beadwork will be on view until Aug. 21. African beadwork is different from that of the Native Americans, and this display includes beaded crowns, a ceremonial sword, jewelry and clothes. Call 923-2337 for more information.

HOBBS GALLERY
38 Newbury St., Boston
Recent paintings by Alan Bortman are on view through Sept. 30. His unique and meticulous oil painted canvases depict the mixed messages that lie beneath the surface of commercial culture. It's as contemporary as tomorrow's news (at least, that's what we're told).

NOSTALGIA FACTORY
336 Newbury St., Boston
The Factory salutes the "Dog Days" of August with a month-long exhibition of original old advertising - dating from the late 19th century to the early 1970s - featuring canines. Call 236-8754.

VOSE GALLERIES
238 Newbury St., Boston
The oils of French artist Charles Rousselon are on display through September, depicting the life and marvelous scenery of Normandy and the Opal Coast.

- Decide on classification of Ad.
- Begin your ad with what you're trying to sell.
- Be descriptive, list all the standard features of your item first.
- State the terms of the sale, the price, whether you're "flexible or negotiable."
- Include phone number and times to call.

INFORMATION AND PRICES

RATES: Line ads, six lines long: one issue - $29, four issues - $87, eight issues - $150, twelve issues - $200. Additional lines - $7 per. Bold heading - $5. Classified display -$20 per column inch. For frequency discounts, call for prices.

REGULATIONS: All Ad copy is subject to approval before publication. Any Ad deemed obscene will be either edited or removed. The Improper Bostonian shall be under no liability for failure to insert an advertisement. Any errors that do not affect the material value of the Ad will not be credited. Errors must be reported within the first week of publication. All ads must be prepaid.

CIRCULATION: The Improper Bostonian reaches over 190,000 people every two weeks, making it the largest bi-weekly newspaper in the Boston area. The newspaper is available at newsstands, schools, hotels, entertainment oriented businesses, on Boston neighborhoods and by subscription.
